

Alkenes & Water

Addition reactions involving alkenes are reactions in which the carbon-carbon double bond is converted to a single bond and atoms or groups are added to each of the two carbon atoms. Alkenes undergo an addition reaction with water in the presence of a catalyst to form an alcohol.

Oxidation of Ethanol

The alcohols can also be oxidised without combustion to produce carboxylic acids. For example, ethanol can be oxidised to ethanoic acid using an oxidising agent. It is easier to understand what happens if ethanol is shown as C_2H_5OH in the balanced equation: ethanol + oxidising agent \rightarrow ethanoic acid + water

Combustion of Ethanol

The alcohols undergo complete combustion to form carbon dioxide and water. For example, ethanol is used as a fuel: ethanol + oxygen \rightarrow carbon dioxide + water

Ethanol & So

If a small piece ethanol, bubble produced and ethanol. The sodium + ethanol hydrogen

Producing Est

Carboxylic acids can make esters. Esters are compounds which all contain the functional group -COO-. Esters have fruity smells and can be used as solvents. The general equation for the formation of an ester is: alcohol + carboxylic acid \rightarrow ester + water

Oxidation of Ethanol

The alcohols can also be oxidised without combustion to produce carboxylic acids. For example, ethanol can be oxidised to ethanoic acid using an oxidising agent. It is easier to understand what happens if ethanol is shown as CH_3CH_2OH in the balanced equation: ethanol + oxidising agent \rightarrow ethanoic acid

Hydrating Ethanol

Hydration is an anaerobic process: glucose \rightarrow ethanol + carbon dioxide. Yeast, a type of single-celled fungus, provides the enzymes needed for fermentation. If the yeast cells become too cold, fermentation happens very slowly, or may not happen at all. Ethanol can also be made by reacting ethene with steam. This process is called hydration. Mixture of ethene and steam is passed over a phosphoric acid catalyst at a temperature of 300°C and 60-70 atmospheres of pressure. The ethene required for this reaction is obtained from crude oil.

DNA

DNA (deoxyribonucleic acid) is a polymer which is essential for life. Most DNA is a double helix, where two polymer chains are lined up and then twisted around each other. The DNA polymer is made from four different types of monomer, which are called nucleotides.

Amino Acids

Amino acids are molecules which have at least two functional groups. All amino acids contain the -NH2 group and also the carboxylic acid group -COOH. Amino acids are polymerised in cells to make polypeptides and proteins.

Amino acids react by condensation polymerisation so for every monomer which is added to the growing polymer chain, one molecule of water is also produced.

Polyester

Polyesters occur naturally as biological polymers, but can also be made artificially. Man-made polymers are often used in clothing. Polyesters are an example of a condensation polymer. A single polyester can be made from a monomer which has two hydroxyl groups (-OH) and another monomer which has two carboxylic acid groups (-COOH).
