

shares stock price rose throughout the second half of 2013. Total volume of trading was falling in the July to September 2013 period and stayed about the same from October to the end of the 2013. Therefore supply decreased from July to the end of the year while in the period from October to December there was also an increase in demand. In general if price and volume have both increased, then the dominant trend has been an increase in demand. If price and volume have both decreased, then the dominant trend has been a decrease in demand. If price has decreased and volume has increased, then the dominant trend has been an increase in supply. If price has increased and volume has decreased, then the dominant trend has been a decrease in supply. These general rules can be seen by drawing a graph of the market with shifting demand and supply curves.
