

The Development Through Life Perspective

life span: refers to the typical length of time to any particular organism can be expected to live

assumptions: effect, statement, or premise, that is considered true & that guides the underlying logic of a theory

psychosocial approach: a process that seeks to understand development as a product of interactions among biological, psychological, & societal processes

life expectancy: the average number of years from birth to death, as based on statistical analysis of the length of life for people born in a particular period

Assumptions of the Text

Our perspective on development through life makes the following six assumptions that are critical to the orientation of this book:

- (1) Growth occurs at every period of life, from conception through elderhood.
- (2) Individual lives share both continuity & developmental change over time.
- (3) We need to understand the whole person, because we function in an integrated manner.
- (4) Behavior must be interpreted in the context of relevant settings & personal relationships.
- (5) People contribute actively to their development.
- (6) Diversity is a product of the interaction of the biological, psychological, & societal systems.

plasticity: (1) the capability of being shaped & molded. (2) the capacity for continuous alteration of the neural circuits & synapses of the living brain & nervous system in response to experience/injury that involves formation of new circuits & synapses & the elimination/modification of existing ones

continuity: a condition that characterizes a culture when a child is given information & responsibilities that apply directly to his/her adult behavior

developmental change: patterns of growth & reorganization
