

II. Philosophical Tools and Processes

Philosophy as a science is also a systematized body of knowledge but unlike other sciences which employs observation and experimentation to prove their theories, philosophy uses reason to arrive at a certain knowledge or truth. At the onset Greek philosophers gave us a hint on how to use our intellect to understand realities around us. The tools that they frequently utilized are the following:

1. Philosophical Questions. Philosophy was born because of ignorance. If one is ignorant, he asks questions and if he keeps on questioning the more knowledge he acquires. Once a person stops questioning, he ceases to become a philosopher. In our daily struggles, one needs to ask questions simple, serious and deep questions that we have to grapple with. A philosopher is like a child who has an inquisitive mind who never stops asking questions and finding answers.

SOCRATES

Socrates went further not just asking questions for himself but poses questions to people which is the beginning of series of questions and responses from participants. This philosophical questioning can be best described from an excerpt from Plato's apology of Socrates below:

"...But let us examine each one of the parts of this charge. Now he asserts that I do injustice by corrupting the young. But I, men of Athens, assert that Meletus does injustice, in that he just as a serious matter, easily bringing human beings into trial, pretending to be serious and concerned about things for which he never cared at all. That this is so, I will try to display to you as well. Now come here, Meletus, tell: do you not regard it as most important how the youth will be the best possible?" (Plato's apology of Socrates, 24C)

This method is called dialectics. The Socratic Method, also known as method of elenchus, elenctic method, or Socratic debate, is a form of cooperative argumentative dialogue between individuals, based on asking and answering questions to stimulate critical thinking and to draw out ideas and underlying presuppositions. (Google.com/search) Aristotle said that it was the pre-Socratic philosopher Zeno of Elea who invented dialectic, of which the dialogues of Plato are the examples of the Socratic dialectical method. According to Kant, however, the ancient Greeks used the word "dialectic" to signify the logic of false appearance or semblance. Dialectics is a term used to describe a method of philosophical argument that involves some sort of contradictory process between opposing sides. As a dialectical method, it is a discourse between two or more people holding different points of view about a subject but wishing to establish the truth through reasoned arguments.

18th century philosopher Georg Wilhelm Friedrich Hegel expounded dialectics which later influenced Karl Marx, the father of communism.

2. Logical Reasoning. In philosophy reasoning is the process of thinking about something in a logical way in order to form a conclusion or judgement. It has
