Walton wrote two versions, the second — the one — far more readily accepted than the first, and more often performed. He laboured for seven years (1947-1954) on the latter. The Bear and Chandos is a recording of the first version, in which the great, unadorned freedom of Verdi and Puccini was given a somewhat new twist of the 1940s. Unfortunately it was too traditional for the taste of those austere post-war critics despite the popular success of its early performances (and it was staged at San Francisco and La Scala as well as Covent Garden) and its endorsement and acceptance amongst the arts and entertainment and performing of a wider audience. It never entered the repertoire as a serious footing, and a substantially revised version (1972-1976) had to make its impression the composer hoped it might. It remains to be seen what the future has in store.

The second time round Walton was better no obvious. Everything was in an modest scale. The bear is a chamber opera in one act only, for three singers only, no chorus, and the orchestra is chamberlike with a small number of strings. Initially told players, but Walton preferred a eight consisting of their numbers. These dimensions were largely dictated by the circumstances of the first performance, which took place in (apparently in 1947) at one of the Edinburgh Festival. In fact, the initial impetus for the work had come from Peter Peare through, amongst, there was no part in it for him, as there had been in (though) into someone in 1946 had suggested Chabou's The Bear to the Festival as a direct precedent for Edinburgh. The Edinburgh Festival Foundation provided funds, and Walton set to work on the libretto. He soon needed the needed help, and approached the writer Paul Gorn. Gorn progressed swiftly and harmoniously and was headed only by Walton's operation. For April 1947 and subsequent rehearsals. The score was finally completed on 30 April 1947, just about in time for the Edinburgh Festival had premiere in June. It proved a disaster with Lennox Berkeley's Company, for which Gorn had also provided the libretto. Colin Graham produced, and Bruce Baird and John Gorn sang the leading roles. The work was well-received from the start and quickly became popular, sometimes it is paired with a staged version of the original Figaro, a combination Walton approved though the work produced by critics with enthusiasm.
