animals that produce food e.g. meat, milk or nonfood materials e.g. wool. Animal nutrition also is an integrative science as it deals with the different steps by which the animal assimilates feed or food and uses it for its growth, health and performance e.g. meat, milk and egg production and service. In addition to the health, welfare or productivity of the animal, food animal nutrition is also very important due to economic e.g. feed cost and environmental aspects: manure and undigested, wasted nutrients such as phosphorus and nitrogen contaminating air, soil and water as well as nutritional quality of eggs, meat, milk. Nutrients are chemical elements or compounds present in feed that support health, basic body maintenance or productivity. Fundamental nutrients include water, carbohydrates, protein, fat, vitamins and minerals.
