IV. THE CLASSICAL PERIOD

IV-1. THE CLASSICAL STYLE (1750-1820)

Objectives

This section opens with a general survey of some nonmusical aspects of the classical period. The work of some great figures of the "age of enlightenment" is discussed, and the effect of these men on this age of revolution. The contributions of such rococo artists as Watteau and Fragonard, the neoclassicist David, and such socially conscious artists as Hogarth and Goya are evaluated. Bach's sons are mentioned as representatives of the style galant, and their work related to that of the rococo artists. The problematical term classical is defined, and the remainder of the section seeks to define (often in comparison with the baroque) the various elements of classical style: contrast of mood, flexible rhythm, homophonic texture, melody, dynamics and the piano, the end of the basso continuo, the classical orchestra, and a general statement on classical forms.

Suggestions

1. This section is designed as a general introduction to the classical period, and as such is quite self-sufficient. Challenge students to compare the classical style with the baroque style, either in class or as an assignment. For this introductory section, focus mainly on the general aesthetic and intellectual preferences of the periods, rather than musical elements.
