Climate Change And Developing Countries:

Climate Change and Developing Countries Nijavalli H. Ravindranath, Jayant A. Sathaye, 2002-07-31 Among global environmental issues climate change has received the largest attention of national and global policy makers researchers industry multilateral banks and NGOs Climate change is one of the most important global environmental problems with unique characteristics It is global long term up to several centuries and involves complex interactions between climatic environmental economic political institutional and technological pressures It is of great significance to developing countries as all the available knowledge suggests that they and particularly their poorer inhabitants are highly vulnerable to climate impacts The projected warming of 1.4 to 5.8 C by 2100 and the related changes in rainfall pattern rise in sea level and increased frequency of extreme events such as drought hurricanes and storms are likely to threaten food security increase fresh water scarcity lead to decline in biodiversity increase occurrence of vector borne diseases cause flooding of coastal settlements etc Recognizing the potential threat of severe disruptions the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development was organized in 1992 in Rio de Janeiro Brazil to begin to address ways to reduce these impacts which led to the formulation of the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change This Convention and the subsequent Kyoto Protocol recognize the common but differentiated responsibility of developing and industrialized countries in addressing climate change Developing countries thus have a unique role to play in formulating a sound reasoned and well informed response to the threat of climate change

Climate Change and Developing Countries Antonio G. M. La Viña, 1997 The Climate Change Convention and Developing Countries J. Gupta, 2013-03-09 The climate change problem can only be effectively dealt with if global anthropogenic greenhouse gas GHG emissions can be reduced substantially Since the emission of such gases is closely related to the economic growth of countries a critical problem to be addressed by the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change FCCC is how will the permissible emission levels be shared between industrialised ICs and developing countries DCs The thesis of this book is that the long term effectiveness of the FCCC runs the risk of a horizontal negotiation deadlock between countries and the risk of vertical standstill within countries if there is little domestic support for the domestic implementation of measures being announced in international negotiations The research question is Can one observe trends towards horizontal deadlock and vertical standstill and if yes how can the treaty design be improved so as to avoid such potential future bottlenecks The research focuses on the perspectives of domestic actors on the climate convention and related issues in four developing countries India Indonesia Kenya and Brazil The following key findings emerge from the research 1 Handicapped negotiating power The common theme of the foreign policy of DCs is that ICs are responsible for the bulk of the GHG emissions and need to take appropriate domestic action

Climate Change in Developing Countries M. A. van Drunen, R. Lasage, C. Dorland, 2006-01-01 This book presents an overview of the studies conducted by the Netherlands Climate Change Studies Assistance programme The programme was set up in recognition of the need for developing countries in particular to face the challenges confronting all countries under the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change The book presents an overview of the main results in 13 countries Bolivia Colombia Ecuador Egypt Ghana Kazakhstan Mali Mongolia Senegal Suriname Vietnam Yemen and Zimbabwe It provides a critical evaluation of the methodologies and approaches used a cross country synthesis and recommendations for further studies Subjects dealt with include not only impact studies but also vulnerability and adaptation mitigation and climate related policy Climate Change Adaptation in Developing Countries Muyeye Chambwera, Jesper Stage, 2010 Climate Change Mitigation in Developing Countries Paula Castro, 2014-01-31 Recommendations and discussion on the reform of the CDM invoke debate on the future of this policy in developing countries which is vital material for both policymakers and international institutions introducing similar instruments Students and research Climate Change in Developing Countries M.A. van Drunen, R. Lasage, 2005 Climate Change and Developing Countries Nijavalli H. Ravindranath, Jayant A. Sathaye, 2005-12-16 Among global environmental issues climate change has received the largest attention of national and global policy makers researchers industry multilateral banks and NGOs Climate change is one of the most important global environmental problems with unique characteristics It is global long term up to several centuries and involves complex interactions between climatic environmental economic political institutional and technological pressures It is of great significance to developing countries as all the available knowledge suggests that they and particularly their poorer inhabitants are highly vulnerable to climate impacts The projected warming of 1.4 to 5.8 C by 2100 and the related changes in rainfall pattern rise in sea level and increased frequency of extreme events such as drought hurricanes and storms are likely to threaten food security increase fresh water scarcity lead to decline in biodiversity increase occurrence of vector borne diseases cause flooding of coastal settlements etc Recognizing the potential threat of severe disruptions the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development was organized in 1992 in Rio de Janeiro Brazil to begin to address ways to reduce these impacts which led to the formulation of the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change This Convention and the subsequent Kyoto Protocol recognize the common but differentiated responsibility of developing and industrialized countries in addressing climate change Developing countries thus have a unique role to play in formulating a sound reasoned and well informed response to the threat of climate change Climate Change and Sustainable Development Anil Markandya, Kirsten Halsnaes, 2021-05-30 Makes a substantial contribution to the practical effective analysis of climate change mitigation options in developing countries Development And Cooperation The book is an excellent exercise and a good source of detailed information and a basis for further discussions Any person interested in this major environmental problem should read it International Journal of Environment and Pollution Markandya and Halsnaes collection is thoughtfully put together and can be recommended to all the practitioners in the fields of climate change and sustainable development The Journal of Energy Literature This text argues that the policies pursued by developing countries will be crucial in determining the progress of climate change Many are industrializing rapidly and the largest particularly China and India could have an impact at least as significant as that of the already industrialized economies the reason given by President Bush for taking the US out of the Kyoto Protocol The future of sustainable development in large measure depends on developing countries This book develops a pragmatic framework for evaluating the climate change options faced by each developing country depending on their individual circumstances It assesses present methods suggests how these might be improved and proposes ways in which social and developmental aspects can be taken into account Its discussion of the issues and the methods presented contribute to the practical analysis of climate change mitigation options in developing countries The book should be useful to professionals governments international organizations and environmental groups working on climate change issues as well as researchers academics and students in economics environmental and development studies and international affairs

Climate Change Mitigation Actions in Five Developing Countries Harald Winkler,2017-10-02 Five case studies on mitigation actions MAs in developing countries illustrate the rich diversity of climate action Researchers from Brazil Chile Colombia Peru and South Africa reflect on what is possible in their countries Case studies reflect the sheer diversity of NAMAs from a Pronami on efficient lighting in Peru to longer term challenges of rising energy emissions in Brazil and much else The book compares the similarities and differences across eight elements that could assist in developing and implementing mitigation The comparative analysis highlights both how challenging implementation can be in the context of development but also points to factors that might enable ambitious mitigation The comparison suggests that choice of Mas may be linked to institutional capacity the resources a country is endowed with and hence its emissions profile International support can be an important global enabler The authors find that addressing both development and climate objectives is key This book fills an important gap in the literature from developing country authors about mitigation actions in their own countries This book was published as a special issue of Climate and Development Policies of Adaptation to Climate Change in Developing Countries Philipp Alvares de Souza Soares,2009-07-21 Seminar paper from the year 2009 in the subject Economy Environment economics grade 9 University of Marburg Institute for Co operation in Developing Countries course Climate Change Economic Challenges and the Economics of Stabilization in Developing Countries The Stern Review and beyond language English abstract Climate change is happening even if it isn t induced by greenhouse gas emissions This fact is by now relatively undoubted One possible answer is to mitigate emissions which is already tried through the Kyoto protocol for example But even if these measures are successful they will be effective only with a considerable time lag Accordingly the world will inevitably face changed climate conditions and is already facing them today This led to the realization that adaptation to climate change is necessary This fact is particularly from importance to developing countries Current observations and projections show that they are the ones most affected by the impacts of climate change even though they are the least prepared Adaptation policies designed especially for developing countries are necessary to enable them to withstand the adverse effects of a changing climate the best way possible This paper will focus on how those adaptation policies should look like and what needs to be considered In the beginning a general introduction to adaptation will be given including its role and perspective in respect of climate change Then I will continue by discussing the relationship between developing countries and climate change in general Afterwards I will investigate in the main part what policies of adaptation are needed in developing countries and what should be considered when integrating adaptation into other policies The paper ends with a summarizing conclusion

The Trade and Climate Change Nexus Paul Brenton, Vicky Chemutai, 2021-09-29 While trade can exacerbate climate change it will also be a central part of the solution by enhancing both mitigation and adaptation This report explores the intersection between trade and climate change and the policies that offer the right economic incentives for attaining sustainable growth and poverty reduction through trade how might climate change affect economic growth in developing countries? Franck Lecocq, Zmarak Shalizi, As Climate Changes Kenneth M. Strzepek, Joel B. Smith, 1995-12-07 As Climate Changes International Impacts and Implications is the most comprehensive study to date examining potential global effects of climate change The project which was funded by the US Environmental Protection Agency involved over 150 scientists from around the world Common climate change scenarios were used to examine impacts on agriculture water resources coastal resources forests and human health The studies focused on impacts of climate change on developing countries around the world and included an integrated case study of Egypt In addition the agriculture and forests studies also examined global effects The studies found that developing countries may be more vulnerable to climate change because some impacts may be more negative on these countries they have a higher share of national income in climate sensitive sectors and they have fewer resources to adapt to climate change This volume summarises the methods and findings from these studies

The U.S., Developing Countries, and Climate Protection Kevin A. Baumert, Nancy Kete, 2001 This issue brief explores the United States position on developing countries in climate protection efforts Over the long term most countries including developing ones will need to rein in their greenhouse gas emissions

Development Aid and Adaptation to Climate Change in Developing Countries Carola Betzold, Florian Weiler, 2019-06-04 This book examines development aid for climate change adaptation Increasing amounts of aid are used to help developing countries adapt to climate change The authors seek to discover how this aid is distributed and what constitutes the patterns of adaptation aid giving Does it help vulnerable countries as donors promise or does it help donors achieve economic and political gains Set against the backdrop of international climate change negotiations and the aid allocation literature Betzold and Weiler s empirical analysis proceeds in three steps firstly they assess adaptation aid as reported by the OECD then statistically examine patterns in adaptation aid allocation and finally qualitatively investigate adaptation aid in three large climate donors Germany Sweden and the United Kingdom With its mixed method research design and comprehensive data this work provides a unique state of the art analysis of adaptation aid as a new stream of development aid

Climate Law and Developing Countries Benjamin J. Richardson, Yves Le Bouthillier, Heather McLeod-Kilmurray, Stepan Wood, 2009 The phenomenon of anthropogenic climate change has become of critical importance to all countries However while the majority of developing countries contribute the least to global greenhouse gas emissions they will generally bear the major burden of the social environmental and economic impacts of climate change imposed upon them by developed countries This cutting edge book contains outstanding contributions by scholars from around the world on the need to expand the range of legal and policy mechanisms and strategies required to bridge the gaps between the north and the south to achieve global climate justice Ben Boer University of Sydney and former Co director of the IUCN Academy of Environmental Law This timely book examines the legal and policy challenges in international regional and national settings faced by developing countries in mitigating and adapting to climate change With contributions from over twenty international scholars from developing and developed countries the book tackles both long standing concerns and current controversies It considers the positions of developing countries in the negotiation of a new international legal regime to replace the Kyoto Protocol and canvasses various domestic issues including implementation of CDM projects governance of adaptation measures and regulation of the biofuels industry Through a unique focus on the developing world this book makes a significant contribution to understanding current challenges and future directions of climate law

The Climate Change Convention and Developing Countries Joyeeta Gupta, 2012-12-22 The climate change problem can only be effectively dealt with if global anthropogenic greenhouse gas GHG emissions can be reduced substantially Since the emission of such gases is closely related to the economic growth of countries a critical problem to be addressed by the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change FCCC is how will the permissible emission levels be shared between industrialised ICs and developing countries DCs The thesis of this book is that the long term effectiveness of the FCCC runs the risk of a horizontal negotiation deadlock between countries and the risk of vertical standstill within countries if there is little domestic support for the domestic implementation of measures being announced in international negotiations The research question is Can one observe trends towards horizontal deadlock and vertical standstill and if yes how can the treaty design be improved so as to avoid such potential future bottlenecks The research focuses on the perspectives of domestic actors on the climate convention and related issues in four developing countries India Indonesia Kenya and Brazil The following key findings emerge from the research 1 Handicapped negotiating power The common theme of the foreign policy of DCs is that ICs are responsible for the bulk of the GHG emissions and need to take appropriate domestic action

Climate Change and Developing Countries Banshaikumar Lyngdoh Mawlong, 2018-10-09 Climate change

knows no boundaries and its cost must be borne by all earthlings While the technologically advanced and developed countries are better prepared for responding to climate change it is the developing countries that are the most vulnerable to climate change impacts because they have fewer resources to adapt politically socially technologically and financially Climate change is thus a matter of moral and cultural ethics Climate change adaptation methods need to accommodate traditional environmental knowledge and practices of different indigenous cultures This book explores the ability to concerted global action and mechanisms to enable developing countries to adapt to the effects of climate change that are happening now and which will worsen in the future
