

Public Health Frameworks to Advance Healthy Aging

What is Healthy Aging?

CDC defines healthy aging as “the development and maintenance of optimal physical, mental (cognitive and emotional), spiritual, and social well-being and function in older adults.” To better support older adults, Healthy People 2030 outlines a goal to “improve health and well-being for older adults” by implementing 20 measurable objectives over the next decade.

As of 2016, 49 million adults in the United States were above the age of 65, representing 15% of the population. In 2030, this number is expected to reach 71 million. By 2060, adults over the age of 65 will exceed 98 million and represent 25% of the entire population. Disparities observed in older adulthood are a result of a lifetime of complex upstream factors that drive inequities seen in this growing population. By addressing the social determinants of health in early adulthood, we can mitigate these inequities and promote a higher quality of life for older adults.

Supporting Healthy Aging

ASTHO’s Healthy Aging Policy Statement supports healthy aging across the lifespan by recommending improvements to structural determinants of health, as well as to medical and social services that address healthy aging. ASTHO encourages state and territorial health agencies (S/THAs) to leverage the following frameworks to create an age-friendly environment conducive to improving quality of life across all ages. When considerations for health promotion and disease prevention planning are made for older adults, individuals across all ages and abilities benefit. The graphic above depicts what this new landscape could look like, as the social determinants of health are integrated across the life course. These frameworks can support creating a culture of healthy aging within public health.

Previous efforts to bring healthy aging to the forefront of public health can be seen in CDC’s Healthy Aging in Action report. The report highlights three areas that S/THAs can prioritize to promote healthy aging and increase the proportion of Americans who are healthy at each stage of life. These recommendations include health promotion, injury prevention, and chronic disease management along with another domain that emphasizes facilitation of social engagement, as well as a final domain focused on optimizing physical, cognitive, and mental health statuses of an individual. The following frameworks for healthy aging can support S/THAs in working toward these recommendations.

Trust for America’s Health Age-Friendly Public Health System

Trust for America’s Health (TFAH) developed the age-friendly public health system \(AFPHS\) framework, established in 2017, to promote physical, mental, emotional, and social well-being with the understanding that healthy aging is an adaptive process in response to challenges. It is also a proactive

 Lorraine McDonnell, P. Michael Timpane, Roger W. Benjamin, 2000 Why do America s public schools seem unable to meet today s social challenges As competing interest groups vie over issues like funding and curricula we seem to have lost sight of the democratic purposes originally intended for public education Public schools were envisioned by the Founders as democratically run institutions for instilling civic values but today s education system seems more concerned with producing good employees than good citizens Meanwhile our country s diversity has eroded consensus about citizenship and the professionalization of educators has diminished public involvement in schools This volume seeks to demonstrate that the democratic purposes of education are not outmoded ideas but can continue to be driving forces in public education Nine original articles by some of today s leading education theorists cut a broad swath across the political spectrum to examine how those democratic purposes might be redefined and revived It both establishes the intellectual foundation for revitalizing American schools and offers concrete ideas for how the educational process can be made more democratic The authors make a case for better empirical research about the politics of education in order to both reconnect schools to their communities and help educators instill citizenship An initial series of articles reexamines the original premise of American education as articulated by important thinkers like Jefferson and Dewey A second group identifies flaws in how schools are currently governed and offers models for change A final section analyzes the value conflicts posed by the twin strands of democratic socialization and governance and their implications for education policy Spanning philosophy history sociology and political science this book brings together the best current thinking about the specifics of education policy vouchers charter schools
