Biodiversity and Conservation: Causes and consequences of biodiversity loss 1 : development, habitat loss and invasive species Richard J. Ladle, 2009 Although biodiversity is a relatively new coinage scientists have been studying the subject it describes long before the word's first appearance in the language in the mid 1980s In 1973 for instance the UK Systematics Association held a symposium on The Changing Flora and Fauna of Britain which concluded that not enough attention was being paid to the conservation of rarities a conclusion also reached said the symposium at a meeting of the Linnaean Society some forty years earlier By 1980 the Global 2000 Report to the President published by the US Council on Environmental Quality starkly warned of a diminution of up to one fifth of all species by the turn of the century and there is now a growing consensus that the world faces a biodiversity crisis a potentially catastrophic global loss of genetic ecosystem and most obviously species diversity Indeed especially since the UN Convention on Biological Diversity was promulgated in Rio de Janeiro in 1992 conserving biodiversity has become the principal focus of the global conservation movement Indeed the study of the origins maintenance and protection of diversity has become perhaps the most vibrant offshoot of ecology and conservation studies It is increasingly taught and studied in universities and other research institutions around the world Addressing the need for an authoritative reference work to make sense of this rapidly growing subject and its ever more complex and multidisciplinary corpus of scholarly literature Biodiversity and Conservation is a new title in the Routledge series Critical Concepts in the Environment Edited by Richard Ladle of Oxford University's Centre for the Environment this new Major Work brings together in five volumes the foundational and the very best cutting edge scholarship to provide a synoptic view of all the key issues and current debates

, 2009 Plant Response to Air Pollution Mohammed Yunus, Muhammad Iqbal, 1996-09-10 Air pollution poses a serious threat to human health and the environment worldwide It contributes significantly to regional and global atmospheric issues such as global warming acidification and depletion of the ozone layer It affects every living thing including all kinds of vegetation on which we depend for our survival Although several works have appeared on air pollution few are able to provide the broad background that encompasses the whole gamut of plant responses to atmospheric insult This multi authored work integrates the varied plant growth responses to the pollution stress the focus of the attention is plant rather than pollutant This portrays a clearer picture of plant performance versus air pollution and helps develop a better insight of the pollution based disturbances at the different levels of plant life The book shall interest both students and researchers of environmental botany and forestry as well as all those who love plants and have any interest towards global vegetation and having serious implications for the rich biodiversity of the islands of Borneo and Sumatra Individual chapters have been contributed by international experts and cover a range of issues The relation of the El Niño effect to droughts and fires is discussed and the history of fires in the region is outlined Although the fires were associated with long periods of drought in most cases they had human causes and the land and forest management policies responsible for them are also identified Another chapter describes the important role remote sensing played in monitoring and locating the fires and haze Other contributions are concerned with the chemistry of haze the long range transport of pollutants and their modelling the effects on forest ecosystems and the implications for global climate change Health impacts of the air pollution are discussed and the costs in economic terms are analysed The inability of the Indonesian government to control the fires the public responses to pollution problems and efforts at international co operation are also discussed as is the portrayal of the issues in the media
