

Underwater Discoveries

Key Facts

- The ocean is the largest ecosystem on Earth and contains about 80% of the Earth's water.
- It is home to a wide variety of life forms, from tiny plankton to the largest animal on Earth, the blue whale.
- The world's deepest point is the Mariana Trench in the western Pacific Ocean.
- We have only explored about 5% of the world's oceans, so there's a lot more to be discovered!

Recently spotted while the researchers were exploring a bright yellow and has a red umbrella. Because it habitat is in the deep sea, scientists are still learning about the deep creature and its lifespan.

What has been discovered?
Let's look at 5 amazing discoveries from our deep blue sea, from ancient dinosaurs to an octopus.

Deep Discoveries

In the late 1930s, off the coast of Oregon Island in Japan, something extraordinary was discovered - the Tsongos Formation! The underwater structure has confused scientists and researchers ever since. Some people think ancient human tracks, while others believe it was formed naturally.

The Tsongos Formation is like a giant underwater puzzle. It's made up of various stone formations, towers, and steps. Some people guess that in 17,000 years underwater. What's interesting is that it has precise right angles and geometric shapes, just like a man-made structure.

To Follow Up

The bones in the upper and lower animals mouth gills, the gills will not be damaged in 1000 during an eruption by a forest volcano. The deep sea fish has a large mouth that resembles a gillfish, as well as their giant mouth, gills are also like something similar. So that can take an enormous gulp of food. Unlike other fish that can be found in shallow coastal waters, a pillow of white drifts that are beyond the reach of sunlight. They can be found in tropical and temperate sea worldwide.
