Discovery In Literature:

Literature-Related Discovery: A Review, 2007 Discovery in science is the generation of novel interesting plausible and intelligible knowledge about the objects of study Literature related discovery LRD is the linking of two or more literature concepts that have heretofore not been linked to produce novel interesting plausible and intelligible knowledge i e potential discovery Two major variants of LRD are open discovery systems ODS where one starts with a problem and generates a potential solution or vice versa and closed discovery systems CDS where one starts with a problem and a potential solution and generates linking mechanisms This report reviews the state of the art in ODS LRD only It examines the major LRD concepts evaluates each concept in detail from the perspective of discovery capability and examines the level of potential discovery reported in the literature from each concept s implementation In the evaluation of potential discovery claimed in the published literature a vetting process is used that requires that both characteristics of ODS LRD are present for potential discovery to be affirmed concepts are linked that have not been linked previously and novel interesting plausible and intelligible knowledge is produced The major conclusions are that until recently most of the reported ODS LRD techniques had not generated discovery and this lack of discovery had hampered the growth of ODS LRD substantially However ODS LRD techniques have been developed that allow significantly greater amounts of potential discovery to be generated systematically

Literature-Related Discovery (LRD), 2007 Discovery in science is the generation of novel interesting plausible and intelligible knowledge about the objects of study Literature related discovery LRD is the linking of two or more literature concepts that have heretofore not been linked i e disjoint in order to produce novel interesting plausible and intelligible knowledge i e potential discovery The Art of Discovery Margareth Hagen,Randi Koppen,Margery Vibe Skagen,2010-08-30 This anthology brings together scholars from literature the natural sciences and the philosophy of science to present new perspectives on the relations between literary and scientific communities Drawing on literature spanning the 19th and 20th centuries as well as Europe and the Americas the authors explore how science has been portrayed from the perspective of literature at different times and in different places as challenge or opportunity promise or scandal The disturbance of science emanates perhaps from its association with a frightening future or its ability to change the appearance of the past the scandal occurs as it recalls us to thresholds and hybrids human and non human animal and machine Science however also emerges as a source of metaphor and imaginative modelling of encodings and decodings representations and discoveries Less prominent in the collection though no less important is the view on how scientific cultures portray literature or the literary academic and how science reflects on itself Fiction and Discovery Ira

Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature of the United Kingdom Royal Society of Literature (Great Britain),1898 Narrating Discovery Bruce Robert Greenfield,1992-01 In Narrating Discovery Bruce Greenfield chronicles the development of the antebellum Euro American discovery narrative These narratives depicted the Euro American advance westward not as a violent intrusion into occupied territories but as an inevitable by product of science and civilization Despite the centrality of indigenous peoples in the frontier narratives the landscape was nevertheless sketched in biblical terms as a terrestrial paradise unpeopled and unexplored as writers insisted upon seeing emptiness as the essential quality of the land Beginning with the British writers Hearne Mackenzie and Henry Greenfield then traces the early American narratives of Lewis and Clark Pike and Fremont demonstrating how these agents of the first New World nation state brought a distinct imperial mentality to the frontier viewing it both as foreign and as part of their home But Romantic writers such as Cooper Irving Poe and Thoreau felt ill at ease with the colonialist discourse they inherited and Greenfield shows how to varying degrees each altered a discourse openly based on subjugation to one highlighting profoundly personal and aesthetic responses to the American landscape The book concludes with an illuminating discussion of Thoreau who transformed the discovery narrative from its origins in conflict and institutional authority into the expression of personal identity with the continent as a symbol of American potential Written with clarity and insight Narrating Discovery brings a fresh perspective to current debates over who discovered America and recovers the complexity of frontier experience through a searching look at some of the vivid narrative accounts
