A.) ARCHAEOLOGICAL PERSPECTIVE

The Archaeological approach's understanding needs some preliminary introduction to the field of archaeology. Archaeology is not a realm of Drama or Romance, and is not rooted in the 'hard evidence' or even scientific precision. We need to keep in mind the fact that at no archaeological site you will find that life has been sealed and preserved as it was. In contrary you generally deal with discarded objects of people who used to live there or prayed there once. Despite that archaeologist do sometimes find evidences of careful/deliberate attempt to preserve objects sometimes in graves, or in sanctuary deposits, or as hoards of valuables under the house floor. But for the most part Archaeology is a kind of garbage inspection. Further the sherds of a broken pot will most likely be discarded as garbage because it can be easily replaced however, a broken copper axe will never be discarded as garbage as it is very difficult to replace it and Copper was very difficult to find at a time. Quimby,1972 The Reality of Artifacts Michael Chazan,2018-08-31 Artifacts are hybrids both natural and cultural They are also an essential component in the process of human evolution In recent years a wide range of disciplines including cognitive science sociology art history and anthropology have all grappled with the nature of artifacts leading to the emergence of a renewed interdisciplinary focus on material culture The Reality of Artifacts An Archaeological Perspective develops an argument for the artifact as a status conferred by human engagement with material On this basis artifacts are considered first in terms of their relationship to concepts and cognitive functions and then to the physical body and sense of self The book builds on and incorporates the latest developments in archaeological research particularly from the archaeology of human evolution and integrates this wealth of new archaeological data with new research in fields such as cognitive science haptics and material culture studies Making the latest research available for the general reader interested in material culture while also providing archaeologists with new theoretical perspectives built on a synthesis of interdisciplinary research this book is suitable for courses taught at both graduate and undergraduate students and is broadly accessible An Archaeological Perspective, with a Contribution by George I. the donkey's initial domestication up to the present this book seeks to remedy this situation by using archaeological evidence in combination with insights from history and anthropology to resituate the donkey and its hybrid offspring such as the mule in the unfolding of human history looking not just at what donkeys and mules did but also at how people have thought about and understood them Intended in part for university researchers and students working in the broad fields of world history archaeology animal history and anthropology but it should also interest anyone keen to learn more about one of the most widespread and important of the animals that people have domesticated
