

Dressage movement — Commencing the dressage movement

Answer: This is a positive exercise that will improve the suppleness of the horse and make his voice supple throughout his joints. It causes the quarters stay on the track with the tail to the wall, the horse maintaining the bend of the direction of his travel. The aids are as follows. You must ask for just a little to begin with, being careful to maintain the tempo and the impulsion. The horse is ridden forward by your seat and legs, the outside leg being on the girth in the voice action, keeping the lateral bend and the outline of the horse. The inside leg used a little behind the girth should ask the horse to step forward and sideways. If the exercise falls unbalanced, ride the horse forward beginning again with the usual collected trot circles before asking for any more.

Dressage movement This is a turn of 180 degrees usually ridden in the school with the rider asking the horse to bring his forehand round to describe a small circle around the hindquarters. In effect, therefore, it is a half turn on the haunches, the forehand begins the full turn describing a practically round the haunches, without breaking, at the moment the local leading steps moving forward. The horse should continue forward movement again, smoothly without movement when the full turn is completed. In a dressage movement to the right the horse will be bent to the right, the forehand becoming lighter and the horse lowering his crop. To ride a dressage movement the aids are as follows: the inside leg is behind the girth, the inside leg on the girth, the inside hand is a direct opening rein asking the horse to take that side, the outside rein controls the amount of the turn and regulates the speed. Before a good movement can be achieved the horse must first be working to the collected point well and maintaining good impulsion. The essence of the dressage movement is very subtle as it encourages the horse to lighten his forehand lower his crop and bring his weight back. From a good position the hindlegs should be well engaged and the horse beautifully positioned, therefore, to spring forward into canter. This movement is a good test of the horse's obedience and training, showing his ability and response to the aids. It is best taught at the walk, by using a corner of the school, moving the corner and asking for the movement leading the forehand with the inside rein. The horse should find it easy to step round making a full turn and proceed forward on the opposite side.

Dressage movement — The horse is commencing
