

AQA A LEVEL LAW

A2 LAW MODEL ANSWER

"What is the association between law and justice?"

Sir John Salmond defined law as "a body of principles recognised and applied by the state in the administration of justice." There has been much debate as to what makes a rule the law. Natural law theorists such as Professor Lon Fuller claim that a law can only be valid if it conforms to a higher moral basis. Positivists such as HLA Hart believe that a law made properly is always valid and must be obeyed irrespective of content. Justice is a concept defined simply as fairness, and equality of treatment. Although relatively simple, the meaning of justice is extremely subjective; what is justice to one person can be seen as total injustice by another. Many different theorists have attempted to define "justice" and express their views on how it would be best achieved.

Distributive Justice concerned with the allocation of wealth, rights and responsibilities within a society. Aristotle suggested that these amenities should be distributed on the basis of merit; those who contribute most are the worthiest and therefore should receive the most. In his opinion, justice is proportionality. To allocate resources on the basis of need would be unjust, as
