

Common Pitfalls in Cardiology Medical Billing

Although treatment has advanced by leaps and bounds in the last few decades, heart disease remains the leading cause of death for U.S. adults. And with more than 20 million U.S. adults facing coronary artery disease, cardiology remains one of the busiest and highest-paid specialties. But cardiology is a complex field with ever-changing treatments and procedures. That means keeping track of new cardiology medical billing guidelines and medical coding best practices, which can sometimes vary across payers. Even a solid claim scrubbing process may not catch every slip-up. Due to high dollar value claims, cardiology practice won't afford to receive claim denials. In this article, we listed common pitfalls in cardiology medical billing, and avoiding them would ensure the financial sustainability of your cardiology practice.

Common Pitfalls in Cardiology Medical Billing

1. Inappropriate Use of Modifier

Modifiers are two-digit codes that show you've somehow altered the service in the original five-digit CPT code. Inappropriate use of modifiers like modifier -22, -25, -51, -52, and -53 is one of the common pitfalls in cardiology medical billing. For example, when you submit a claim to the insurance carrier that is coded with a 25 modifier, you are telling the carrier to pay you for both the E/M visit and the minor procedure. The insurance carriers will review claims with an E/M and procedure codes for accuracy. Ensure that when you bill both codes on the same day, your documentation must support both codes. Document adequately for the E/M separate from the procedure. Typically, when these services have been audited payment was rescinded due to incorrect coding, incomplete documentation, and/or lack of medical necessity to support both codes billed on the same day by the same physician.
