Command Decisions:

Command Decisions Martin Blumenson, United States. Dept. of the Army. Office of Military History, 1959 Command Decisions Kent Roberts Greenfield, 2015-12-08 Decision has always exerted a powerful attraction for the student of military affairs In the study of decisions in war whether on the field of battle or in the councils of state lie the great lessons of the conflicts that have shaped the course of history These lessons the professional soldier seeks in order to fit himself for the ultimate responsibilities of command the student of human affairs seeks them to explain past events The historians writing the history of the United States Army in World War II have had a unique opportunity to study the decisions of that conflict The response of the Army's schools and colleges as well as the public to this aspect of their work emphasized for them the interest of soldier and scholar alike in decision making in war at various levels of government and command As research progressed and material with which to illustrate this theme accumulated it appeared that a book on the subject based on the work already accomplished would be of interest to a variety of readers This volume is an outgrowth of that idea It is an analysis of 23 decisions reached by chiefs of state and their military subordinates during World War II Concerned with important political strategic tactical and logistical questions they include the invasions of North Africa and Normandy the use of the atomic bomb the capture of Rome the campaigns in the western Pacific and the internment of Japanese Americans

Command Decision Keir Giles, 2019-05-21 This monograph considers how a classical challenge that commanders face in war namely making critical decisions on the basis of limited and often unreliable information has been exacerbated in the era of big data Data overload complicates the intelligence community s efforts to identify and exclude disinformation misinformation and deception and thus hampers its ability to deliver reliable intelligence to inform decision makers in a timely manner The military commander remains responsible for making a final decision yet the great wealth of data now available through the intelligence cycle amplifies the risk of decision paralysis With this in mind technological solutions tend to be considered the most appropriate response for managing data overload and disinformation While these remain relevant they alone may be insufficient to equip the military commander with the necessary insight to guide decisions through the uncertainty of the big data environment Rather the military commander must cultivate a range of new behaviors in order to avoid decision paralysis and fulfill the distinct leadership roles a commander must play at various stages of the intelligence process Summary
