He put these people down on paper as they were, and he made them talk in the language they customarily used for these purposes. (13-15)

Chandler's views were based on Hammett's own statements on the pages of Black Mask, where he reminded readers that his stories were based on his first-hand experience with crime and criminals as opposed to fictional detectives like Arthur Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes or S.S. Van Dine's Philo Vance.

But we should not overlook the fact that Hammett had worked in the advertising industry before joining Black Mask, and that he knew very well how to sell a product, including literary products like his own stories. Accordingly, his editor Joseph Shaw wrote introductions to his stories, where he emphasized their «reality»: «If you kill a symbol, no crime is committed and no effect is produced. To constitute a murder, the victim must be a real human being of flesh and blood» (vi); Hammett himself supported this marketing strategy writing letters to the editor, as well as introductions and reviews where he used his past as a detective as his main asset to sell his stories and to contrast his realistic detectives and criminals with their fictitious
