Dryden's Dualities Ruth Salvaggio, 1983 This study of Dryden's dualities suggests that the double structures we find in his work go deeper than the superficial dialectic of his language The liveliest parts of Dryden's works are those where divisions become most extreme where he can exploit their poetic possibilities The Scriblerian and the Kit-Cats, 1989

Mandeville and Augustan Ideas English Literary Studies, 2000 When students of eighteenth century ideas think of the great names of the period the list seldom includes Bernard Mandeville To the general reader the omission passes without notice for none of Mandeville's writings enjoy the stature of those of Hume or Defoe Yet a closer examination reveals that Mandeville stands out as one of the most important minds in the first three decades of the eighteenth century indeed readers familiar with his Fable of the Bees 1714 1723 find that it contains ideas that found their way into the political and religious debates of his day as well as social theories that would come to be more famously associated with later figures like Voltaire Hume and Adam Smith Mandeville therefore occupies an idiosyncratic position in Augustan ideas he is unknown to all but the specialist but he nevertheless exerted a marked influence on the thought of his age 1 In the past scholars have been preoccupied with the difficulty of pinning Mandeville down to a consistent series of positions 2 partly because his writings span three decades and embody virtually every literary form then available He seems to have made his debut as a political satirist in his native Holland but then switched to the translation of La Fontaine's fables his aim apparently being the improvement of his English 3 Having immigrated to England and settled in London he embarked on a writing career that may have been intended to supplement the income from his medical practice By the time of his death in 1733 Mandeville had written sixteen separate works contributed essays to The Female Tatler and experimented with a variety of forms including satirical verse fables essays and dialogues The Road from Horton John Martin Evans,1983 Spine title Looking backwards in Lycidas A Bibliography of Johnsonian Studies, 1970-1985 Donald J.
