Michael Kenneth Huner, 2025-11 The story of nineteenth century Paraguay is the story of the dawn of modern nationhood in the world and a devastating war is the culmination of this tale The War of the Triple Alliance 1864-70 considered the bloodiest interstate conflict in the history of the Americas pitted Paraguay against the combined forces of imperial Brazil and the republics of Argentina and Uruguay By the end of the war Paraguay was defeated and occupied losing more than half its total population Why then did everyday people in nineteenth century Paraguay join and endure the violence and trauma associated with postcolonial sovereignty In Parishioners of Sovereignty Michael Kenneth Huner answers this question He explores how modern nationhood became a living breathing reality among everyday people in Paraguay even as such bonds of sovereignty remained fluid and contingent in the years leading up to and during the war Although conventional history still portrays Paraguay's experience in the conflict as the result of a precocious cultural and ethnolinguistic based nationalism Huner argues in contrast that religion and republicanism rendered modern nationhood a moral imperative for which everyday Paraguayans worked died killed and subverted By tracing the complex interplay of religion republicanism and local social history that created the Paraguayan nation and state and utilizing unique sources in the Guaran language Parishioners of Sovereignty casts crucial new light on the social history of early nation building throughout the Americas The Heartsease library, 1903 The Saturday Evening Post, 1908 Moore's Rural New-Yorker, 1905 Movie Maker, 1972
