Control Of Eye Movements:

The Control of Eye Movements Paul Bach-y-Rita, 2012-12-02 The Control of Eye Movements presents the proceedings of the Symposium on the Control of Eye Movements organized by the Smith Kettlewell Institute of Visual Sciences of the Pacific Medical Center and the Department of Visual Sciences of the University of the Pacific Graduate School of Medical Sciences San Francisco California November 10 11 1969 The book is organized into two parts Part I is devoted to presentations of anatomical physiological pharmacological psychological and clinical aspects of eye movements The material presented should provide a valuable reference source as well as increase awareness of the need for further investigation of many aspects of the basic physiology of eye movements Part II presents a series of papers dealing with models of various parts of the oculomotor system The modeling approach to control of eye movements is still in its infancy and the present work presents the first comprehensive survey of biophysical mathematical and engineering aspects of eye movement control

Neuro-Ophthalmology A. Straube, U. Büttner, F. Bandello, 2007-07 All motor behavior is characterized by sensory inputs causing specific motor reactions Because humans modify motor reactions voluntarily or through experience this input output relation is more complex in humans than in lower vertebrates Eye movements provide a window on fundamental brain function not only for topographic diagnosis of dysfunctions but also for the comprehension of normal brain function This book highlights basic mechanical properties of eye movements explains the neuronal basis of the vestibular ocular reflex saccadic eye movements smooth pursuit eye movements and vergence eye movements and deals with their pharmacological manipulation in disorders Since precise measurement of motor reactions is essential for understanding the oculomotor system one chapter critically discusses current registration methods and another one considers the possibilities and limitations of modeling it by control theory methods Its comprehensive characterization of eye movements and their relation to brain function makes this publication essential reading to ophthalmologists neurologists and clinical neuropsychologists psychology and cognitive sciences Visual and Control Aspects of Saccadic Eye Movements Laurence R. Young, Bert L. Zuber, Lawrence Stark, 1966 The research related in this report represents part of a continuing effort to study the physiology of the visual system in man using the experimental and analytic techniques of control engineering Recent reports have dealt with the dynamics of the vergence and version tracking loops emphasizing the intermittent characteristics of the latter and some consideration of intraocular pressure regulation This report consists of two studies related to saccadic eye movements those rapid conjugate eye movements which jump the eyes about voluntarily and involuntarily These saccades form the position correcting loop for visual tracking to keep the eyes on target Part one of the report by Dr L R Young investigates the control aspects of saccades considering the information used the feedback available and the observed mechanical dynamic performance of this fast slewing control Some new experimental results on the saccadic dead zone lead to a simple statistical theory for the time of occurrence of small corrective eye movements The question of eye movement proprioception is discussed and a variety of saccadic control models are critically reviewed Part two of the report by Drs B L Zuber and L Stark concentrates on the information acquisition associated with eye movements rather than the mechanical characteristics The miniature involuntary eye movements occurring during fixation are reexamined from the point of view of their effect on visual acuity Results are presented on saccadic suppression or the elevation of visual acuity thresholds associated with microsaccades and voluntary saccadic movements Considered together with suppression of vision during the fast phase of vestibular nystagmus and pupillary response suppression during saccades these results bear directly on overall models of information processing in the visual control system Preface Physiological Control of Eye Movements in Humans Bert Louis Zuber, 1965 Vestibular and Brain Stem Control of Eye, Head and Body Movements H.
