

The Creation of the Universe

It is impossible to know precisely how out of nothing, the universe began to exist. According to the big bang theory—the theory most widely accepted in the scientific community—in the beginning, there appeared an infinitely small and dense burning ball that later rose to space, matter, and energy. This happened 13.7 billion years ago. The great, unanswered question is what caused a small dot of light-filled with concentrated energy from which matter and antimatter were created—to arise from nothingness. In very little time, the young universe began to expand and cool. Several billion years later, it acquired the form we know today.

Cosmic Inflation Theory

Although no one knows precisely the nature of inflation, it is thought to have occurred in a fraction of a second after the beginning of the universe. It is believed that inflation caused the universe to expand at a rate that is faster than the speed of light. This theory explains why the universe is so uniform in temperature and density.

THE UNIFORMITY OF TEMPERATURE AND DENSITY OF THE UNIVERSE IS ONE OF THE MOST STRONG EVIDENCES FOR THE BIG BANG THEORY. IT IS BELIEVED THAT INFLATION CAUSED THE UNIVERSE TO EXPAND AT A RATE THAT IS FASTER THAN THE SPEED OF LIGHT.

Energy Radiation

Energetic Radiation

The energetic radiation that permeates the universe is a remnant of the fireball that existed in the first moments of the universe. It is a form of electromagnetic radiation that has been stretched and cooled by the expansion of the universe. It is now in the form of a uniform background of microwave radiation.

ELEMENTARY PARTICLES
In the beginning, the universe was a soup of particles that interacted with each other. As the universe expanded, it cooled, and the particles began to separate. The particles that survived are the ones we know today.
