

SECOND LANGUAGE ACQUISITION

Second Language Acquisition (SLA)

Definition: Second Language Acquisition (SLA) refers to both the study of individuals and groups who are learning a language after their first language (L1) and the process of learning that language. The additional language is called a second language (L2), even if it's the third, fourth, or tenth language acquired. It is also commonly referred to as a target language (TL), indicating the language aimed to be learned.

Scope of SLA:

1. Informal L2 Learning:

- o Takes place in naturalistic contexts without specialized language instruction.
- o SLA also examines how languages are learned through natural exposure and immersion, as experienced by immigrants or individuals living in a target language environment.
- o Example: A Japanese child who moves to the USA and picks up English through playing and attending school with native English-speaking children.
- o Example: An adult Guatemalan immigrant in Canada who learns English through interactions with native English speakers or coworkers who speak English as a second language.

2. Formal L2 Learning:

- o Occurs in classrooms with structured lessons.
- o Example: A high school student in England taking a French class.
- o Example: An undergraduate student in Russia taking an Arabic course.
- o Example: An attorney in Colombia taking night classes in English.

3. Combination of Formal and Informal Learning:

- o Involves both classroom instruction and real-life language use.
- o SLA studies how languages are acquired in formal educational settings, like classrooms, where learners get structured instruction and feedback.
- o Example: A high school student in England takes French classes, receiving lessons, assignments, and tests from a teacher.
- o Example: An American student taking Chinese language classes in Taipei or Beijing while also using Chinese for social interactions and daily living.
- o Example: An adult Ethiopian immigrant in Israel learning Hebrew through attending special classes and interacting with coworkers and other residents.
