

Building without Barriers for the Disabled

BY SARAH B. HARRISS AND JAMES H. GARDNER, JR.

At a time when the need for accessible buildings is becoming more and more acute, the special needs of the disabled are often overlooked. This book explains how to design buildings that are accessible to all people. It covers a wide range of subjects, from the basic principles of accessibility to the specific details of wheelchair access. The book is written in a clear, concise style and includes many illustrations and photographs to help illustrate the concepts. It is an essential reference for architects, interior designers, and anyone involved in the design of buildings.

First, the book explains the basic principles of accessibility. It discusses the different types of disabilities and how they affect the use of buildings. It also discusses the legal requirements for accessibility and the importance of designing buildings that are accessible to all people. The book then goes on to discuss the specific details of wheelchair access. It covers the requirements for wheelchair ramps, elevators, and other features. It also discusses the requirements for wheelchair access to restrooms, telephones, and other facilities. The book includes many illustrations and photographs to help illustrate the concepts. It is an essential reference for architects, interior designers, and anyone involved in the design of buildings.
