Abstract

Since the publication of the 2018 FIGO Cancer Report, giant strides have been made in the global effort to reduce the burden of cervical cancer, with the World Health Organization (WHO) rolling out a global strategy for cervical cancer elimination, aiming for implementation by 2030. In over 130 countries, including low- and middle-income countries, HPV vaccination is now included in the national program. Screening has seen major advances with wider implementation of HPV testing. These interventions will take a few years to show their impact. Meanwhile, over half a million new cases are added each year. FIGO's revised staging of cervical cancer (2018) has been widely implemented and retrospective analyses of data based on the new staging have been published. Minimally invasive surgery has been shown to be disadvantageous in women with cervical cancer. This chapter discusses the management of cervical cancer based on the stage of disease, including attention to palliation and quality of life issues.

1 | INTRODUCTION

Globally, cervical cancer continues to be one of the most common cancers among females, being the fourth most common after breast, colorectal, and lung cancer. GLOBOCAN 2020 estimated that, worldwide, there were approximately 604 000 new cases of cervical cancer, with 342 000 deaths annually.¹ The majority of new cases and deaths (approximately 85% and 90%, respectively) occur in low- and middle-income countries (LMICs), where it is the third most common cancer among women.

2 | ANATOMICAL CONSIDERATIONS

The cervix is the lowermost part of the uterus and is a cylindrical structure composed of stroma and epithelium. The ectocervix, which projects into the vagina, is lined by squamous epithelium. The endocervical canal, which extends from the internal os to the external os, is lined by columnar epithelium. Almost all cases of cervical carcinoma originate from the ecto- or endocervical mucosa in the transformation zone, the area of the cervix between the old and new squamocolumnar junction.

The ability to easily visualize and sample the cervix contributed to very early understanding of the natural history of cervical cancer. The fact that it needs little or no anesthesia for treatment by freezing or burning led to the development of simple outpatient techniques of screening and prevention.

3 | EARLY DETECTION AND PREVENTION OF CERVICAL CANCER

Cervical cancer is a rare long-term outcome of persistent infection of the lower genital tract by one of about 15 high-risk HPV
