

Evaluation of Publications from the American Academy of Ophthalmology

A 5-Year Analysis of Ophthalmology Literature

Objective: To analyze recent publications in Ophthalmology, the journal of the American Academy of Ophthalmology.

Design: Retrospective review of published articles.

Participants: No human participants were involved in the study.

Methods: Articles published in Ophthalmology from January 2018 to December 2022 were reviewed and analyzed.

Main Outcome Measures: Research and review articles were included and analyzed per the following: total number of published articles based on related subspecialty area, level of evidence using the modified Oxford level of evidence, number of citations, number of listed authors, gender of the corresponding author, country of affiliation of the corresponding and contributing author(s), and involvement of consortium(s), group(s), or committee(s).

Results: A total of 965 articles were included. The mean (standard deviation) number of authors per article was 8.6 (5.7) and the majority of corresponding authors were male (665, 70.7%). The greatest number of published articles were related to retina (296, 30.7%) followed by glaucoma (172, 17.8%). The greatest number of Preferred Practice Pattern guidelines were also related to retina (7/24, 29.1%), followed by cornea/dry eye syndrome/external disease (6/24, 25%). Retina (77) had the most level 1 evidence, glaucoma (30) for level 2 evidence, and retina for levels 3 (69) and 4 (65). There were 223 articles contributed by consortia/groups/committees, with most from retina (73, 32.7%) followed by glaucoma (40, 17.9%). The mean number of citations per subspecialty article was highest in retina (45.8/article), followed by uveitis (31.7/article). The United States had the greatest number of affiliated corresponding authors (544, 56.4%), followed by the United Kingdom (68, 7.0%). There were 357 (37.0%) articles with coauthors affiliated outside the corresponding author's country of affiliation, although with a downward trend over the most recent 5-year period. There has been an increasing trend in the number of authors and consortia/group/committee involvement in publications.

Conclusions: Although team science and collaborations have increased recently, ongoing efforts to diversify individuals, groups, and subspecialties may be needed.

Financial Disclosure(s): Proprietary or commercial disclosure may be found in the Footnotes and Disclosures at the end of this article. Ophthalmology Science 2023;3:100395 © 2023 by the American Academy of Ophthalmology. Evidence-based health care, previously evidence-based medicine, is considered to have modernized health care.¹ It integrates the best available evidence, the health care professional's expertise, and the patient's values to provide optimum care for a particular individual.^{2,3} Incorporating the best scientific evidence from high-quality research is as important as the other components, although this should be conceptualized as a situated practice in treating the patient rather than research-based judgment.¹

Research has been an integral part of decision-making in medicine. High-quality research should be objective with rigorous scientific methodology.⁴ One potential indicator of the quality of research is the number of times the paper has been cited.⁵ The number of citations gives the journal a metric on how well a fellow researcher or investigator influences their research. Certain metrics include Impact Factor and CiteScore—defined as the number of citations received in 2 and 3 years by papers published in a given period, divided by the number of papers published in a certain period.⁶ Another metric of quality is the level of evidence generated, and several frameworks have been developed to measure the level of evidence.
