

CHARACTER EDUCATION FOR ELEMENTARY LEARNERS

Children learn their “many firsts” inside the comforts of their own homes with their parents as their first teachers. Surprisingly, many still pass on the responsibility of teaching good values to the schools. Pathetic as it may sound, let us remember that no amount of success in school can compensate for the failure one has at home.

Character education is a shared responsibility by the family, school and the community. It is a common effort whereby each sector contributes to the total development of the individual. In school character education is integrated in the different disciplines. How does one effectively impart it especially for children in the elementary grades with little attention span?

Five effective teaching strategies

1. Involve the parents.

- Parents are your partners in character education. You simply compliment and reinforce each other.
- Get them involved in school activities and in the total learning process. Of course, that doesn't mean that they will be part of your lesson plans and teacher worksheets.
- As much as possible, give them responsibilities to work on together with their children. Let them feel your willingness to work together in building a morally upright child.
- Sustain the momentum with frequent communications.

2. Role playing.

Boy, kids just love role playing. Even outside of the classroom, girls like the idea of cooking food and boys playing around with their toy soldiers. This can be an effective strategy in teaching character
