Explaining High Unemployment in ECCU Countries Ronald James,2019-07-11 In recent years unemployment rates in some ECCU countries have been among the highest globally This paper evaluates several factors that could explain them finding that high unit labor costs in a context of strong unionization are significantly associated with high structural unemployment while the global crisis added a cyclical component Our analysis also suggests that high paid jobs in the public and tourism sectors which have been growing considerably in recent decades could have increased the reservation wage and lowered labor force participation We find no indication that high structural unemployment is related to the phase out of EU preferences on bananas sugar exports or to a skills mismatch As expected unemployment has been substantially but only temporarily fueled by large natural disasters General Extension Division of Florida Record ,1961 Catalog University of Florida,1961 St. Vincent and the Grenadines International Monetary Fund.
