Atlas Of Occupational Health And Diseases:

Atlas of Occupational Health and Disease John Harrison, Nerys Williams, 2004-04-30 This highly illustrated text and atlas provides a unique pictorial account of occupationally related disorders and the processes that give rise to them. Serving as a concise textbook as well as an illustrative reference, the atlas covers all the major occupational disorders and their causes with a particular focus on disease recognition, risk assessment, and prevention of occupational diseases. Emphasising clinical and diagnostic aspects, each group of images is accompanied by a brief but full description of the condition being illustrated. The high quality illustrations comprise mainly full colour photographs drawn from a number of international sources. The comprehensive content is divided into sections according to the conditions being presented. Parts One and Two describe respectively diseases associated with chemical and physical agents, including the effects of exposure to metals, pesticides, noise, heat, and cold. Part Three describes diseases relating to ergonomic and mechanical factors, while Part Four looks at those associated with microbiological agents, including TB and malaria. Further Parts consider occupational disorders of the skin and lung, occupationally related cancers, and reproductive effects. Consideration is also given to the important areas of work and mental health, and to workplace assessment and worker protection. Ideal for the trainee and practising occupational health physician, general practitioners, and occupational and public health practitioners, the book will also be a useful reference for occupational health nurses and occupational hygienists, trainees specialising in internal medicine, and medical students.

Review of the Department of Labor's Site Exposure Matrix Database Institute of Medicine, Board on the Health of Select Populations, Committee on the Review of the Department of Labor's Site Exposure Matrix (SEM) Database, 2013-04-14. Beginning with the development of the atomic bomb during World War II, the United States continued to build nuclear weapons throughout the Cold War. Thousands of people mined and milled uranium, conducted research on nuclear warfare, or worked in nuclear munitions factories around the country from the 1940s through the 1980s. Such work continues today, albeit to a smaller extent. The Department of Energy (DOE) is now responsible for overseeing those sites and facilities, many of which were and continue to be run by government contractors. The materials used at those sites were varied and ranged from the benign to the toxic and highly radioactive. Workers at DOE facilities often did not know the identity of the materials with which they worked and often were unaware of health risks related to their use. In many instances, the work was considered top secret and employees were cautioned not to reveal any work related information to family or others Workers could be exposed to both radioactive and nonradioactive toxic substances for weeks or even years Consequently some of the workers have developed health problems and continue to have concerns about potential health effects of their exposures to occupational hazards during their employment in the nuclear weapons industry In response to the concerns expressed by workers and their representatives DOL asked the Institute of Medicine IOM to review the SEM database and its use of a particular database Haz Map as the source of its toxic substance occupational disease links Accordingly this IOM consensus report reflects careful consideration of its charge by the committee and describes the strengths and shortcomings of both To complete its task IOM formed an ad hoc committee of experts in occupational medicine toxicology epidemiology industrial hygiene public health and biostatistics to conduct an 18 month study to review the scientific rigor of the SEM database The committee held two public meetings at which it heard from DOL Division of Energy Employee Occupational Illness Compensation DEEOIC representatives the DOL contractor that developed the SEM database the developer of the Haz Map database DOE worker advocacy groups and several individual workers The committee also submitted written questions to DOL to seek clarification of specific issues and received written responses from DEEOIC The committee s report considers both the strengths and weaknesses of the SEM and the Haz Map databases recognizing that the latter was developed first and for a different purpose The committee then discusses its findings and recommends improvements that could be made in both databases with a focus on enhancing the usability of SEM for both DOL claims examiners and for former DOE workers and their representatives Review of the Department of Labor s Site Exposure Matrix Database summarizes the committee s findings
