Many of the vets I interviewed asked me why I was interested in World War II I never forgot when Pearl Harbor was attacked I was five years old and standing at the end of the kitchen counter next to the black art deco style radio The announcer was very loud and excited but I didn't know what he was talking about My mother was at the other end of the counter standing in front of the kitchen sink washing a dish All of a sudden she turned off the water and came over to stand in front of the radio I had never seen a look on her face like that before She called my dad to come here Both of them stood in front of the radio with these shocked and unbelieving faces I never forgot that experience We next went to Sunday school and church and I remember all of the adults were talking to each other in low tones with stunned looks on their faces

Memory Miranda Fraley,2004 This dissertation examines the evolution of Civil War memories in Rutherford County Tennessee from the 1860s to the present It explores how race gender and regional identities shaped individuals perspectives on the war commemorative events and organizations and the development of historic sites such as Stones River National Battlefield This study demonstrates how civilians and soldiers began to understand and commemorate this war before the conflict ended It discusses the two main local commemorative groups Union and Confederate and how they evolved over time This dissertation complicates the history of Civil War battlefields managed by the federal government by investigating the relationships between Stones River National Battlefield African American landowners and park neighbors and local white Confederate sympathizers Investigating Confederate memory on a local level exposes the unequal struggle for leadership of this movement between white women and men Although women largely created and sustained Confederate commemoration in the county men usurped their projects and positions of authority during times like the 1890s and 1960s when political and social developments menaced white male supremacy Gendered disputes between white men and women helped transform Confederate commemoration over time from a culture of mourning to a celebration of white soldiers heroism and finally into a form of entertainment that glorified the Confederate past and white male supremacy Abstract pages vii viii Memories of
