CASE 1

A 58-year old woman remains intubated in the intensive care unit (ICU) after a recent abdominal operation. In the operating room, she receives more than 10 L of fluid and blood products but has received aggressive diuresis with furosemide postoperatively. In the past 3 days, she has generated 12 L of urine output, and her blood urea nitrogen (BUN) and serum creatinine (SCr) have steadily increased to 40 and 1.5 mg/dL, respectively. Her urine chloride (Cl) concentration was 9 mEq/L (24 hours after her last dose of furosemide). This morning, her arterial blood gas (ABG) reveals pH 7.50, PaCO₂ 46 mmHg, and bicarbonate (HCO₃⁻) 34 mEq/L. Her vital signs include a blood pressure (BP) of 85/40 mmHg and a heart rate (HR) of 110 beats/ minute.

1. Which action is best to improve her acid-base status?

A. 0.9% sodium chloride (NaCl) bolus. - The patient manifests metabolic alkalosis, which is a primary increase in serum bicarbonate concentration (>30 mEq/L). In its pure form, it manifests as alkalemia (pH > 7.40). As a compensatory mechanism, metabolic alkalosis leads to alveolar hypoventilation with a rise in arterial carbon dioxide tension (PaCO₂). (Metabolic alkalosis. Medscape. 2018.) Due to the patients diuretics, she experienced volume contraction or the decrease in the volume of body fluid. Monitoring of chloride concentrations is essential to prevent or treat alkalosis. Administration of normal saline (0.9% NaCl) would correct the low chloride levels of the patient (Normal chloride (urine) = 25-40 mEq/L). (Chloride (Urine). Health Encyclopedia - University of Rochester Medical Center. 2020.)

B. 5% dextrose (D5W) bolus. - Though the water content of both D5W and 0.9% NS solution is equal (1000 mL), much more fluid will reside in the intravascular space if given in the form of 0.9% NS (as none enters the intracellular space). Hence, 0.9% NS is preferred over D5W if the aim is to correct intravascular volume depletion. (Dehydration and volume depletion: How to handle misconceptions. World Journal of Nephrology. 2019.)

C. Hydrochloric acid infusion. - Infusion of HCl is indicated for patients experiencing metabolic alkalosis with arterial pH of > 7.55 and a PaCO₂ of > 7.45. (Hydrochloric acid for treating metabolic alkalosis. The Japanese Journal of Surgery. 1989.)

D. Acetazolamide intravenously. - Acetazolamide would be a consideration if the metabolic alkalosis persisted after correcting the volume contraction or other underlying problem. (Acetazolamide-mediated decrease in strong ion difference accounts for the correction of metabolic alkalosis in critically ill patients. BioMed Central. 2006.)
