Agriculture in Capitalist Europe, 1945-1960 Carin Martiin, Juan Pan-Montojo, Paul Brassley, 2016-06-17 In the years before the Second World War agriculture in most European states was carried out on peasant or small family farms using technologies that relied mainly on organic inputs and local knowledge and skills supplying products into a market that was partly local or national partly international The war applied a profound shock to this system In some countries farms became battlefields causing the extensive destruction of buildings crops and livestock In others farmers had to respond to calls from the state for increased production to cope with the effects of wartime disruption of international trade By the end of the war food was rationed when it was obtainable at all Only fifteen years later the erstwhile enemies were planning ways of bringing about a single agricultural market across much of continental western Europe as farmers mechanised motorized shed labour invested capital and adopted new technologies to increase output This volume brings together scholars working on this period of dramatic technical commercial and political change in agriculture from the end of the Second World War to the emergence of the Common Agricultural Policy in the early 1960s Their work is structured around four themes the changes in the international political order within which agriculture operated the emergence of a range of different market regulation schemes that preceded the CAP changes in technology and the extent to which they were promoted by state policy and the impact of these political and technical changes on rural societies in western Europe     Women, Social Leadership, and the Second World War James Hinton, 2002-11-21 By mobilizing a million housewives the upper and middle class leaders of Women's Voluntary Service made a vital contribution to Britain's war effort At the same time they sought to sustain their own authority as social leaders James Hinton's original and evocative study reconstructs an intimate portrait of a women's public world neglected by historians It challenges accepted accounts of the democratizing impact of the Second World War Among women the war reinforced not democracy but the continuities of class     The Listener, 1987     International Labour and the Origins of the Cold War Denis MacShane, 1992 This is the first major study of trade unions in the launch of the Cold War in the 1940s Using unpublished archival material from Europe and the United States MacShane challenges existing interpretations of international labor's role in the Cold War He argues that European traditions and political differences were more important than American interventions in determining labor's attitudes to international problems after the Second World War     British Monetary Policy, 1945-51 Susan Howson, 1993 The first majority Labour government in Britain was
