Cytochrome Systems S. Papa, B. Chance, L. Ernster, 2012-12-06 This volume is based on the proceedings of an International Symposium on Cytochrome Systems Molecular Biology and Bioenergetics that was held at Selva di Fasano near Bari Italy between April 7 and 11 1987 It contains papers covering the subjects discussed at the Symposium contributed both by participants of the meeting and by some invited speakers who were not able to attend The aim of the Symposium was to bring together experts in various research strategies currently being applied to the study of cytochrome systems including molecular genetics protein chemistry enzymology of electron transfer and protonmotive activity in energy transducing biological membranes Because of the high degree of complexity of cytochrome systems and the increasing sophistication in recent years of the different experimental approaches there has been a growing specialization sometimes even a tendency to over specialization among scientists working in this field This in itself seemed to justify a meeting where representatives of various disciplines could exchange their results and discuss their conclusions In addition and perhaps even more importantly it was felt that meetings of this kind provide an opportunity for a cross fertilization of approaches and ideas among representatives of various fields of science The present meeting proved to be an ample illustration of the success of such an interaction

Chemistry and Biology Achim Müller,1992 Various aspects of electron and proton transfer in chemistry and biology are described in this volume The joint presentation was chosen for two reasons Rapid electron and proton transfer govern cellular energetics in both the most primitive and higher organisms with photosynthetic and heterotrophic lifestyles Further biology has become the area where the various disciplines of science which were previously diversified are once again converging The book begins with a survey of physicochemical principles of electron transfer in the gas and solid phase with thermodynamic and photochemical driving force Inner and outer sphere mechanisms and the coupling of electron transfer to nuclear rearrangements are reviewed These principles are applied to construct artificial photosynthesis leading to biological electron transfer involving proteins with transition metal and or organic redox centres The tuning of the free energy profile on the reaction trajectory through the protein by single amino acids or by the larger ensemble that determines the electrostatic properties of the reaction path is one major issue Another one is the transformation of one electron to paired electron steps with protection against hazardous radical intermediates The diversity of electron transport systems is represented in various chapters with emphasis on photosynthesis respiration and nitrogenases The book will be of interest to
