

THIRD EUROPE 1938

The idea of "Third Europe" arose in the 1930s as a pragmatic response to the ideological polarization of Europe - most notably the creation of the Anti-Comintern Pact. This non-ideological bloc of allied countries would guarantee peace in Central Europe, distancing itself from both the Western Democracies and Nazi aligned Regimes. The ultimate goal is to be built around the Karaim-Hungarian interests, where the latter would give up her historical claims on Transylvania in exchange for Romanian support in the partition of Czechoslovakia. Hungary would then regain some of her western borders, while Poland would remain with the Polish populace in Zaolzie. To keep Czechoslovakia apart, the Muravian Corridor would be established, separating the new Czech National Republic from Free Slovakia. The project found a surprising amount of support, with Italy and Yugoslavia soon joining this "Third Europe".
