Controlling Disease Due To Helminth Infections:

Controlling Disease Due to Helminth Infections Crompton D.W.T.,2003 Helminth infections are caused by parasitic worms including tapeworms and roundworms These diseases are associated with poverty and in school age populations in developing countries intestinal helminth infections rank first among the causes of all communicable and noncommunicable diseases This book is based on papers presented at an OECD conference held in Bali Indonesia in February 2000 which sought to review activities for the control of diseases due to soil transmitted helminth infections in Indonesia and neighbouring countries Prevention and Control of Schistosomiasis and Soil-transmitted Helminthiasis WHO Expert Committee on the Control of Schistosomiasis,2002 Schistosomiasis sometimes called bilharziasis is a human parasitic disease which ranks second behind malaria in terms of its socioeconomic and public health importance in tropical and subtropical areas of the world This disease is endemic in many developing countries however cost effective solutions are both available and deliverable This report contains the findings of a WHO expert committee which met to consider the prevention and control of this disease and related infections Its recommendations provide clear strategic guidance on the implementation of control measures and on ensuring their sustainability Controlling Infectious Diseases Mary Mederios Kent,Sandra Yin,2006 Helminth Diseases of Ruminants, Diagnosis, Epidemiology and Control ,1995* Ash & Orihel's Atlas of Human Parasitology Lawrence R. M. A. Ukoli,1992 In this unique book Ukoli explores the main issues to be confronted in the formulation of policies and implementation of preventive and control measures against parasitic diseases in tropical Africa The high prevalence of parasitic diseases along with poverty hunger and squalor is an indisputable index of underdevelopment and a reliable indicator for assessing the health profile of the less developed countries of tropical Africa However though the fundamental principles of the various preventive and control measures are common knowledge they do not seem to be yielding the desired results in tropical Africa The provision of safe water and improvement of general sanitation which are fundamental to freedom from parasitic disease along with other measures are frustrated by acute financial infrastructural and manpower constraints Ukoli examines the implications of these issues and their socio cultural and socio economic impact in this fascinating study Report of the Annual Meeting of the South African Association for the Advancement of Science ,2005
