

Grief and Loss Coping Strategies for Foster Parents

You may experience grief when a foster child leaves your home. Certainly, parents are grieving when their children have been placed in out of home care. Children being placed in your home are experiencing grief related to their removal, changing schools, losing contact with friends, worrying about their parents, missing their pets—the list is a long one!

Grief is a natural response to a loss. It is the emotional suffering that you feel when something or someone you love is taken away. Any loss can cause grief including:

- The end of a relationship
- Loss of health
- Changes in a role or job
- Loss of financial stability
- A miscarriage or still birth
- Death of a family member
- Death of a pet
- Loss of a cherished dream
- A loved one's serious illness
- Loss of a friendship
- Loss of safety after a traumatic experience

Dr. Elisabeth Kubler-Ross introduced the world to the theory of five stages of grief in 1969.

- Denial: "This cannot be happening to me!"
- Anger: "Why is this happening? Who is to blame?"
- Bargaining: "Make this not happen and in return, I will _____"
- Depression: "I am too sad to do anything."
- Acceptance: "I am at peace with what happened."

If you experience any of these emotions following a loss, or observe these emotions in others, it may help to know that the reaction is natural and that healing will come in time.

Grief is a roller coaster, not a series of stages. People often do not experience the stages in the same order:

It is best not to think of grief as a series of stages, rather, we might think of the grieving process as a roller coaster, full of ups and downs, highs and lows. Like many roller coasters the ride tends to be rougher in the beginning, the lows deeper and longer. The difficult periods should become less intense and shorter as time goes by but it takes time to work through a loss. Even years after a loss, especially at special events such as a family wedding or the birth of a child, we may still experience a strong sense of grief.
