Chinese Railway Workers

Many of the railway workers came from China. Chinese workers were looking for a new opportunity for work. China had a very large population and not very much farmland. China was also struggling with droughts and war.

Chinese railway workers faced severe conditions and received significantly lower pay compared to their European counterparts. They were separated from European workers and assigned to more dangerous tasks, resulting in deaths. The wages were so low that many workers could not afford to return home when the railway was complete.
