Building a Successful Palestinian State Robert E. Hunter, Seth G. Jones, 2006-03-08 Throughout the history of Arab Israeli peace negotiations security has been the most important and most challenging issue for Palestinians Israelis and their neighbors This study examines key external security issues regarding the construction of a Palestinian state Its proposals include a NATO led international peace enabling force and Israeli Palestinian confidence building measures Building a Successful Palestinian State ,2005 Helping a Palestinian State Succeed: Key Findings Steven Simon, C. R. Anthony, Glenn Robinson, David Gompert, Jerrold Green, RAND CORP SANTA MONICA CA., 2007 The United States the European Union Russia and the United Nations along with Israel and the Palestinian Authority all officially support the establishment of an independent Palestinian state This book summarizes research conducted by the RAND Corporation from September 2002 to September 2004 to develop recommendations about steps that Palestinians Israel the United States and the international community could take to promote the success of a new state if established The first study identified the requirements for a successful Palestinian state The study team surveyed a broad array of political economic social resource and environmental challenges that a new Palestinian state would face They also estimated the investment required over the first ten years of statehood to help ensure security build infrastructure and facilitate the success of the new state The second study explored options for addressing the housing transportation and related infrastructure needs of a burgeoning Palestinian population The study explicitly considered issues related to potential immigration to a new Palestinian state of a substantial number of diaspora Palestinian refugees The research team developed initial cost estimates for implementing their recommendations The cost estimates developed in these studies suggest that the funding necessary to implement RAND s recommendations is within the capacity of combined international resources and private investors RAND s analyses assume a peace accord but many of the recommendations in both studies could be implemented constructively prior to Palestinian independence Readers in search of more information should consult the respective volumes The RAND Palestinian State Study Team Building a Successful Palestinian State The RAND Corporation MG 146 1 DCR 2007 and Doug Suisman et al The Arc A Formal Structure for a Palestinian State RAND Corporation MG 327 1 GG 2007 The Arc ,2011 An exploration of options for strengthening the physical infrastructure for a new Palestinian state this study builds on analyses that RAND conducted between 2002 and 2004 to identify the requirements for a successful Palestinian state That work Building a Successful Palestinian State surveyed a broad array of political economic social resource and environmental challenges that a new

Palestinian state would face This study The Arc A Formal Structure for a Palestinian State examined a range of approaches to siting and constructing the backbone of infrastructure that all states need in the context of a large and rapidly growing Palestinian population The research team develop a detailed vision for a modern high speed transportation infrastructure referred to as the Arc This transportation backbone accommodates substantial population growth in Palestine by linking current urban centers to new neighborhoods via new linear transportation arteries that support both commercial and residential development The Arc avoids the environmental costs and economic inefficiencies of unplanned unregulated urban development that might otherwise accompany Palestine s rapid population growth Constructing the key elements of the Arc will require very substantial investment of economic resources It will also employ substantial numbers of Palestinian construction workers It seems plausible that key aspects of the Arc design can be pursued with great benefit even before an independent Palestinian state is established Journal of Palestine Studies ,2007 A quarterly on Palestinian affairs and the Arab Israeli conflict
