1. Organizational culture is one of the issues connected with the formation and reinforcement of the organizational environment. The organizational culture shapes the behavior of employees, and, according to Clark, gives them the sense of belonging, identity, togetherness, purpose in their work etc. (29). The reason for which this issue is important is that the organizational culture is a set of informal traditions, rituals, stories, and myths, is that the culture forms the unity of the organization's members.

It is the unique profile of any organization that forms the collective values, norms, and priorities of each organization member, making him or her personally interested in the success of the company (Clark 29). Under the conditions of ensuring the positive organizational climate, with the supportive atmosphere and shared values, high morale, supportive conditions etc. the engagement and commitment of employees will be incomparably higher.

2. Formal and informal socialization procedures are extremely important in the accommodation of the individual to a new working place, his or her acquaintance with formal and informal aspects of the organization's functioning, the rules, customs, traditions, and rituals that are common for a union (Clark 54).

The advantage of the informal socialization process is that it occurs on an individual level, it is less structured and more spontaneous, and thus it can give a much wider range of information about the union to the new member. The direct relationship between informal socialization and employee commitment has been proven by research findings (Clark 55). Therefore, one can see that the better one gets accustomed to the new organizational culture, the better he or she will get involved in the working team.

Consequently, getting into a close company of co-workers, achieving a high level of trust and warmth, which means acceptance by those being in the staff longer, will positively affect the employee's attitude to the union. The informal socialization can occur through seeing how staff members interrelate, learning how disputes and conflicts are resolved, what relationships with the senior staff are supported, what traditions about dressing, conduct, lunch brakes etc. are common.
