Notes by a Naturalist on the "Challenger" Henry Nottidge Moseley, 1879 The Challenger Expedition of 1872-73 was conceived to examine the deep sea floor worldwide and disprove the theory of a dead zone in the oceans below a certain depth Using a modified Royal Navy ship the expedition sailed nearly 70 000 nautical miles across the globe collecting oceanographic data and marine specimens and laying the foundations for the science of oceanography by later publishing fifty volumes of reports The naturalist Henry Moseley 1844-91 recounts the voyage in this 1879 work covering visits to many remote islands and the taking of samples at hundreds of locations The voyage's achievements included the collection of over 4 000 new marine species and the discovery of the world's deepest ocean trench Challenger Deep Moseley's observations on native peoples also proved important as traditional cultures were changing rapidly at the time Illustrated with numerous woodcuts this narrative illuminates an adventure of great scientific significance

The Architecture of South-East Asia Through Travellers' Eyes Roxana Waterson, 1998 From the sixteenth century onwards but particularly from the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries comes a wealth of accounts written by foreigners of their experiences in South East Asia They were seafarers businessmen ambassadors or travellers for sheer pleasure or curiosity All vividly recorded their impressions of many aspects of South East Asian life Not least of these concerned the enormous diversity of indigenous and colonial architectural forms they encountered and the style of living of the people who created them From the sublime ruins of Angkor Wat the elegance of life in the colonial residences in Malaya to the bustle of burgeoning cities like Singapore the travellers of these eras evoke for us the many amazing architectural styles of the region Their often sensitive and lively observations are as fascinating to readers today as they were to their contemporaries
