McCormack, 1986 The war of words between critics and writers is no paper conflict but affects daily life where literature and politics interact The twentieth century concern is nowhere more evident than in Ireland today where the growing Troubles in Ulster gave critical debate particular focus In this clear eyed survey Bill McCormack assesses the alliances the animosities the factions seeking to show the common ground they share even as they dispute its possession In his analysis of individual writers journals and larger enterprises McCormack raises some unexpected possibilities Is Conor Cruise O'Brien best understood as a Catholic mystic Should Field Day be seen as a depoliticising force in Irish culture What truly distinguishes the manoeuvres of Seamus Heaney Terence Brown Edna Longley and Denis Donoghue from each other Have critics begun to learn from historians or have historians begun to fight shy of culture Is the British Literary Left imperialist Is there a non sectarian art Underlying this polished and stimulating critique is a sombre awareness of literature's contribution to political malaise and a call for an engagement with the real forces that govern people's lives The Last Battle of Atlantis Thomas D.
