

Like water and oxygen, light is a precondition for human life. We are physiologically dependent on sunlight to enrich us with vitamin D, regulate our hormones, metabolic functions, temperature, sleep and mood, and to connect us with the rhythms of life. Light also helps regulate our internal environment. We watch the changing day and night, which dominates our understanding of the physical world and in turn, affects our internal conditions, which in turn affects our and seasonal light conditions to remain oriented in space and time. Our subconsciousness is oriented in space and time. Our subconsciousness regulates the 24-hour sleep-wake cycle that governs our lives. Sunlight also penetrates our eyes, where it is converted into electrical signals that pass through the optic nerves to the brain.

The human body is a complex system of interconnected parts that work together to maintain a state of balance. This balance is essential for our survival and well-being.
