Abstract

Hepatitis B virus (HBV) infection is a major public health problem worldwide. The aim of this study was to document the dynamics of HBV viral load during the follow-up of chronic hepatitis B patients at the Saint Camille Hospital in Ouagadougou (HOSCO) from 2017 to 2021. This descriptive retrospective study was carried out in the Hepato-Gastro-Enterology Department of HOSCO and focused on patients who were undergoing treatment for chronic viral hepatitis B. A total of 260 cases of chronic hepatitis B were included in the study. The most affected age group was 21 to 30 years, accounting for 48.08% of the cases. Lifestyle factors included alcohol consumption (3.08%) and tobacco use (2.69%). Major risk factors for transmission included lack of vaccination (98.46%), family history of HBV infection (68.00%) and engagement in high-risk activities (28.00%). Patients requiring treatment were prescribed Tenofovir 300 mg tablets. FibroScan® showed the presence of stage F3-F4 fibrosis (2.14%) and S3 steatosis (13.33%). After one year of follow-up, 6.92% of patients achieved an undetectable viral load with normalized transaminase levels. The majority of other patients had a detectable viral load but below 20,000 IU/mL. The prevalence of viral hepatitis B remains significant worldwide. Although effective and well-monitored treatment can lead to undetectable viremia, prevention remains the most effective strategy for

Hepatitis Viruses Jing-Hsiung James Ou, 2012-12-06 Hepatitis viruses research started more than fifty years ago The names of hepatitis A and hepatitis B were introduced in 1947 when it became clear that there were two types of hepatitis that were transmitted either enterically or parenterally It became apparent in the 1970 s that there were additional hepatitis viruses distinct from hepatitis A and hepatitis B and thus the term non A non B hepatitis was introduced The non A non B hepatitis was further divided into post transfusion non A non B hepatitis and enterically transmitted non A non B hepatitis in the 1980 s By the end of the 1980 s both post transfusion non A non B virus and enterically transmitted non A non B virus had been identified and renamed hepatitis C virus and hepatitis E virus respectively Hepatitis delta antigen was first recognized as an antigen associated with hepatitis B virus infection in the 1970 s In the early 1980 s a virus was isolated and named hepatitis delta virus These five different hepatitis viruses have distinct replication pathways and are major health concerns They have become an important topic for teaching to graduate level and medical students Hepatitis Viruses provides a comprehensive up to date review of these viruses to readers Each chapter is written by one of the top researchers in the field and topics include the epidemiology and the natural history of infection of these viruses the molecular biology and the replication cycle of individual hepatitis viruses host virus interactions and the pathogenesis of hepatitis viruses the immunology of hepatitis viruses the relationship between hepatitis viruses and hepatocellular carcinoma the viral vaccines and antiviral drugs This book can serve as a supplemental reading material to graduate students and medical students and to any researcher who would like to learn more about hepatitis viruses

Corona- and Related Viruses Gary A. Levy, Pierre J.
