

Financial information is entered into the accounting system

- Details of sales, purchases, receipts, payments and other transactions or adjustments are entered into the accounting system. This may be in the form of a manual journal entry or by entering other relevant information (eg raising a sales invoice) which the accounting system can use to automatically process entries into the appropriate ledger accounts.

Ledger accounts and other records are updated

- Through a process of double entry, the ledger accounts are automatically updated based on the information entered into the accounting system.
- Other records, such as the individual lists of receivables or payables, are updated simultaneously.

Trial balance

- The year-end trial balance should be produced to allow verification of the ledger balances. This might include identifying exceptional items (eg very large or very small amounts, expense accounts showing as credit balances, etc), identifying any suspense accounts to be cleared and posting any year-end journal entries (eg closing inventories, irrecoverable debts, etc).

Financial statements

- Ledger accounts are closed off and year-end financial statements are produced.
