Language, Power and Pedagogy Jim Cummins,2000-09-22 Population mobility is at an all time high in human history One result of this unprecedented movement of peoples around the world is that in many school systems monolingual and monocultural students are the exception rather than the rule particularly in urban areas This shift in demographic realities entails enormous challenges for educators and policy makers What do teachers need to know in order to teach effectively in linguistically and culturally diverse contexts How long does it take second language learners to acquire proficiency in the language of school instruction What are the differences between attaining conversational fluency in everyday contexts and developing proficiency in the language registers required for academic success What adjustments do we need to make in curriculum instruction and assessment to ensure that second language learners understand what is being taught and are assessed in a fair and equitable manner How long do we need to wait before including second language learners in high stakes national examinations and assessments What role if any should be accorded students first language in the curriculum Do bilingual education programs work well for poor children from minority language backgrounds or should they be reserved only for middle class children from the majority or dominant group In addressing these issues this volume focuses not only on issues of language learning and teaching but also highlights the ways in which power relations in the wider society affect patterns of teacher student interaction in the classroom Effective instruction will inevitably challenge patterns of coercive power relations in both school and society Language and Culture in Multilingual Contexts Yew Lie Koo,2013

Digital Literacy and Academic Success in Online Education for Underprivileged Communities Jose Rafael Lopez Islas,2013 This study investigated the relationship between digital literacy and academic performance in the context of an online learning high school program aimed at students from underprivileged groups The study proposed that digital literacy should be understood as a construct of several variables that create a progression from basic though indispensable physical conditions of access to technology to complex skills and attitudes that permit a student to succeed in an online learning situation Using path analysis as a methodological tool the study tested a three stage model that measured the chain of effects of the variables that integrate the digital literacy construct both among them and on academic performance as the overall dependent variable of the study The model organized the variables in three stages conditions of access to technology general digital skills that included motivation knowledge and skills to use digital technology as well as frequency and diversity of usage practices of technology and context specific skills required to successfully use technology in a particular domain in this particular case online distance learning The study found that in the particular online learning context of this investigation better conditions of access to technology had a mediated and strong positive effect on academic performance by increasing the use of Internet for social and entertainment purposes which in turn led to a higher use of the learning platform software and to better digital and academic skills These skills had a positive effect on academic performance through independent learning as a mediating variable A second finding that runs in part in an opposite direction was that better conditions of access increased the use of social networks which had both a positive effect on independent learning in terms of increasing familiarity with the Internet and computer resources and a negative effect perhaps simply because the time one spends with social media may diminish the time one has available for learning South African Journal of Higher Education ,2008
