Accounting for Aggression Gerda Siann, 2024-08-08 The despair and incomprehension that often seem to be the only possible response to acts of aggression and violence have led to attempts by academics and writers from a wide variety of backgrounds to understand and explain such behaviour The concern and anxiety that is felt by many people about this subject is such that some of their accounts notably by Konrad Lorenz Desmond Morris Robert Ardrey and Anthony Storr have become popular and even best selling books Originally published in 1985 Accounting for Aggression provides a comprehensive synthesis and assessment of these writings and other contemporary theory and research on aggression and violence at the time The author presents a variety of accounts of aggression drawing on original work in the areas of biology sociobiology ethology psychology and sociology Each account is evaluated according both to the criteria of scientific methodology and to the extent to which it illuminates our understanding and appears to have a lasting explanatory value In the last chapter the author presents an integrative approach to the subject area which synthesizes those findings for which there appears to be substantial empirical support within a framework of the meaning that aggressive and violent behaviour offers to those who carry it out Accounting for Aggression will be of great value to students and practitioners in the fields of psychology psychiatry social work and education Furthermore it will be welcomed by interested members of the general public who are concerned with issues such as whether or not violence is inherent in human nature the extent to which interpersonal violence is related to group violence and the extent to which violence in the media affects violent behaviour

The Effects of Aggression on College Adjustment when Accounting for Impulsivity Christian Wright, 2018 Aggression and college adjustment has been examined in previous literature many times Aggression and impulsivity have also been examined in literature numerous times due to being interrelated constructs However most research has not examined impulsivity on college adjustment and no research has looked at aggression on college adjustment accounting for impulsivity The aim of this study was to further develop the understanding of the relationship between aggression and impulsivity as well as examine how these two constructs affect social emotional and academic adjustment to college Specifically this study sought to examine the relationship between aggression and college adjustment accounting for impulsivity The Buss Perry Aggression Questionnaire BPAQ the Urgency Premeditation Perseverance and Sensation Seeking Scale UPPS the UCLA Loneliness Scale and the College Adjustment Test were administered online to 193 undergraduate students These students were also asked to report their current GPA Results showed that hostility and anger negatively correlated with social and emotional adjustment and that physical aggression was the only variable with a relationship to GPA Urgency and lack of perseverance negatively correlated with both emotional and social adjustment variables Even when accounting for impulsivity physical aggression negatively correlates with GPA and hostility still negatively correlates with emotional and social adjustment variables These findings are important because it helps to further separate aggression and impulsivity as constructs and shows that
