The Psychodynamics of Culture William Manson,1988-11-14 Manson s study is devoted to retrieving Kardiner from the limbo into which he lapsed some 30 years ago The author offers a historical reconstruction of the classic psychocultural seminars and reassesses the theoretical and methodological innovations that emerged from them As a historian Manson displays an impressive command of his materials He does an admirable job of summarizing the ethnographic data on which Kardiner based his psychodynamic formulations and interpretations He even manages to evoke something of the emotional flavor of the seminar sessions and the very different personalities involved This is a consequence of his judicious use of rich primary sources the exhaustive unpublished reminiscences of Kardiner himself the private papers of Margaret Mead and the recollections and or seminar notes of Aberle Barnouw Du Bois and others a most worthwhile volume one that should be read by specialists in culture and personality American Anthropologist While a number of anthropologists in the 1930s and 1940s incorporated isolated elements of Freudian theory into their studies of the interplay of culture and personality the psychoanalyst Abram Kardiner transcended disciplinary boundaries to forge a genuine psychocultural synthesis Although the importance of Kardiner s pathbreaking The Individual and His Society is sometimes acknowledged William Manson argues that Kardiner s work has often been overlooked or misinterpreted by social scientists and psychiatrists In this first comprehensive study of Kardiner s theoretical contributions Manson traces the development of Kardiner s psychodynamic formulations and evaluates the impact of his model on neo Freudian culture and personality research and psychological anthropology in general The author discusses Kardiner's extended collaboration with leading anthropologists which resulted in the creation of a psychocultural model for personality formation in different societies. He examines Kardiner's theory of culturally conditioned basic personality and the psychocultural technique for studying the interrelationships of specific cultural practices, personality adaptation, and supernatural belief systems. Manson's analysis places Kardiner's theories in the wider context of concurrent neo-Freudian approaches in anthropology and parallel developments in culturalist psychoanalysis and interdisciplinary social science. A balanced and lucid assessment of a major figure in psychological anthropology, this work will be of interest for psychoanalytic studies, cultural and psychological anthropology, psychodynamics, cross-cultural psychology, and the history of the social behavioral sciences.

Jesus, Paul, Luke-Acts, and 1 Clement David L. Balch, 2023-06-19. In this book, the author draws on two original sources: a Greek biographer, historian, and rhetorician, Dionysius of Halicarnassus, as well as on Pompeian domestic art and architecture. Generally, NT scholars read texts, but Greeks and ancient Romans loved beauty. The walls and floors of their houses were decorated with thousands of colorful frescoes and mosaics, art that two millennia later is still on display in Pompeii. Christians lived and worshipped in those typical houses, relating the art to NT texts, which generates many intriguing new questions: What stories, myths, did Greeks and Romans see every day? What were their sports, and how violent were they? Many NT scholars know as much or more Latin than they do Greek, and they therefore cite the Latin historian Livy rather than the Greek Dionysius, who wrote a century before the first Christian historian, Luke. Dionysius' rhetoric expressed values shared across cultures by Greeks, Romans, and Jews, e.g., by the historian and rhetorician Josephus, some values that Luke also shares. Dionysius makes clear that cities and ethnic groups had to praise how they treated emigrant foreigners, questions handled differently by Josephus and by Luke. This enables new interpretations of Jesus' inaugural speech in Luke 4 and of Peter's second Pentecost speech in Acts 10.
