Composting Municipal Sludge A Technology Evaluation:

Composting Municipal Sludge Arthur H. Benedict, Eliot Epstein, Joel E. Alpert, 1988 A guide to the technologies involved in composting sludge from municipal waste facilities including case studies from small municipalities and metropolitan areas From the Introduction Widespread interest in composting as a means of municipal sludge treatment in the United States began in the early 1970s At that time the Los Angeles County Sanitation Districts initiated windrow composting of sewage sludge at the Joint Water Pollution Control Plant in Carson California and the U S Department of Agriculture investigated large scale studies of static pile composting at the Agricultural Research Station in Beltsville Maryland Since that time interest and activity in municipal sludge composting has increased dramatically In 1984 the U S Environmental Protection Agency EPA initiated a technology evaluation of municipal sludge composting practice based on investigations at five operating facilities The results of the technology evaluation are presented in this report Objectives Objectives of the municipal sludge composting technology evaluation were as follows 1 To investigate aerated static pile and windrow composting technologies based on experience at operating facilities 2 To compare and contrast features of the aerated static pile and windrow technologies based on this experience 3 To assess operating performance and cost features 4 To identify key problems associated with municipal sludge composting using these technologies 5 To define methods which have been used or are being considered to resolve these problems The technology evaluation focused on three composting processes the extended aerated static pile process the conventional windrow process and the

Dewatering Municipal Wastewater Sludge Orris E. Albertson, 1991-12-31 Describes dewatering processes for municipal wastewater sludge Up to date information is provided which a design engineer or others involved in the decision making process for sludge treatment can use to select appropriate dewatering processes for particular applications The object is to reduce sludge volume producing a sludge which behaves as a solid not a liquid and subsequently reducing the cost of treatment and disposal
