J. Downing, 2015-06-25 Excerpt from The Architecture of Country Houses Including Designs for Cottages Farm Houses and Villas With Remarks on Interiors Furniture and the Best Modes of Warming and Ventilating There are three excellent reasons why my countrymen should have good houses The first is because a good house and by this I mean a fitting tasteful and significant dwelling is a powerful means of civilization A nation whose rural population is content to live in mean huts and miserable hovels is certain to be behind its neighbors in education the arts and all that makes up the external signs of progress With the perception of proportion symmetry order and beauty awakens the desire for possession and with them comes that refinement of manners which distinguishes a civilized from a coarse and brutal people So long as men are forced to dwell in log huts and follow a hunters life we must not be surprised at lynch law and the use of the bowie knife But when smiling lawns and tasteful cottages begin to embellish a country we know that order and culture are established And as the first incentive towards this change is awakened in the minds of most men by the perception of beauty and superiority in external objects it must follow that the interest manifested in the Rural Architecture of a country like this has much to do with the progress of its civilization The second reason is because the individual home has a great social value for a people Whatever new systems may be needed for the regeneration of an old and enfeebled nation we are persuaded that in America not only is the distinct family the best social form but those elementary forces which give rise to the highest genius and the finest character may for the most part be traced back to the farm house and the rural cottage It is the solitude and freedom of the family home in the country which constantly preserves the purity of the nation and invigorates its intellectual powers The battle of life carried on in cities gives a sharper edge to the weapon of character but its temper is for the most part fixed amid those communings with nature and the family where individuality takes its most natural and strongest development About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
