The Global Tapestry: 1200-1450

Origins, Spread, and Impact of the World's Major Religions:

Hinduism originated in the Indian subcontinent around 1500 BCE, making it one of the oldest known religions in the world. It developed gradually through the Indus Valley civilization and Indo-Aryan migrants—pastoral peoples from modern-day Iran or southern Russia. These Indo-Aryans brought their language, social structures, and religious traditions. Hinduism does not have a single founder but is rooted in a feature of Hindu society was the caste system, which divided society based on birth. This system deeply influenced Hindu society during times of decentralization and under Muslim rule. The Delhi Sultanate, allowed Hindus to maintain their religion a collect taxes. While Hinduism remained largely concentrated in the Indian subcontinent, its ideas and practices spread to Southeast Asia in cultural exchange. Although Hinduism was adopted by many societies, its practices like the caste system were largely rejected or modified.

Networks of Exchange: 1200-1450

Between 1200 and 1450, long-distance trade expanded dramatically across Afro-Eurasia due to improvements in transportation technology and commercial practices. Innovations encouraged greater commercial activity and led to the rise of wealthy trading cities. Increased trade also gave rise to diasporic communities, where merchants from different regions settled far from home bringing their cultures, religions, and customs with them. The demand for luxury goods boosted production and transformed labor systems. Overall, increased trade during this period reshaped societies, economies, and political structures across continents.

Make sure you know which routes on your map are the Silk Roads, Indian Ocean Trade Routes and Trans-Saharan Trade Routes.

Cities, Technologies, and Goods:

Trade routes connecting East Asia to the Middle East and Europe through Central Asia and the Middle East, the Silk Road included Chang'an (China), Samarkand (Central Asia), and Baghdad (Middle East). Important goods traded along the Silk Road included silks from the East (China), and horses, spices, and gold from the West.

On the Map: Use symbols to mark the origin of goods.

Interregional Contacts and Conflict lead to Cultural Diffusion:

Between 1200 and 1450, interregional contacts such as the voyages of Zheng He, the travels of Ibn Battuta, and the Crusades led to significant technological and cultural transfers across Afro-Eurasia.

Zheng He was a Chinese Muslim admiral who led several large expeditions during the early Ming Dynasty, traveling as far as East Africa and the Arabian Peninsula. These voyages helped spread Chinese technologies such as the magnetic compass and shipbuilding techniques like the sternpost rudder. In return, Zheng He's expeditions introduced foreign goods, ideas, and animals, such as giraffes, which were brought back to the emperor's court.

Additionally, the travels of Ibn Battuta, a Muslim scholar from Morocco who journeyed across much of the Islamic world and beyond, helped spread ideas, religious practices, and cultural knowledge. His writings provided detailed accounts of the different cultures he encountered, from West Africa to India and China.

Environmental Consequences of increased trade

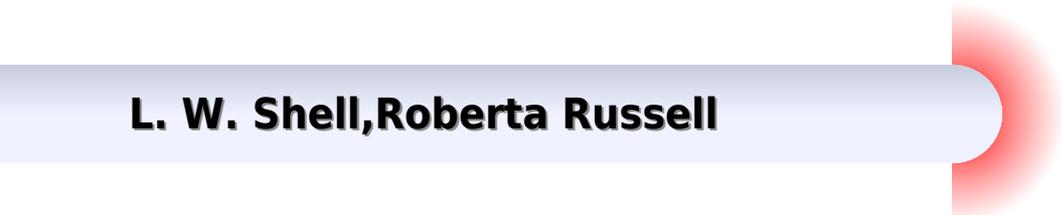

Between 1200 and 1450, the diffusion of crops and agricultural technology increased due to the growth of interregional trade networks like the Silk Road, Indian Ocean trade, and Trans-Saharan routes. Crops such as citrus fruits and sugarcane spread from Southeast Asia and India to the Islamic world and eventually to the Mediterranean through both land and sea routes. Bananas, originally from Southeast Asia, were introduced to East Africa through Indian Ocean trade, where they became a staple crop. Champa rice originated in Vietnam and was introduced to China during the Song Dynasty. It spread through trade and diplomatic exchange. Coffee, originally from Ethiopia, spread to the Arabian Peninsula, especially Yemen, where it became popular in Islamic culture. Through trade networks like

On The Map: use a symbol for each different crop and place it along the trade routes near the places it diffused to. Color code it to show the place it originated.
